The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Unemployment compensation

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to the taxation of unemployment compensation. Changes to the applicable law were made by the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] and the Technical Amendments Act of 1979 [Technical Corrections Act of 1979, Pub. L. 96-222, 1980-20 C.B. 5]. The regulations would provide the public with the guidance needed to comply with those Acts and would affect all taxpayers who receive unemployment compensation under a governmental unemployment compensation plan.

DATE: The regulations are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION

BACKGROUND

On December 19, 1979, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations [26 CFR Part 1] under section 85 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 [44 FR 75183]. The amendments were proposed to prescribe rules and regulations for the taxation of unemployment compensation received by certain taxpayers under certain governmental unemployment compensation plans. Although no public hearing was requested, one written comment was received which related to the proposed rules. Several other comments were received which questioned certain public policy decisions made by Congress when it enacted section 85. After consideration of the comments regarding the proposed amendments, those amendments are adopted as revised by this Treasury decision. The preamble to the notice of proposed rulemaking summarizes and explains the proposed amendments.

FRAUDULENTLY RECEIVED UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

One comment was received concerning the taxation of fraudulently received unemployment compensation. The commentator suggested that the regulations under section 85 of the Internal Revenue Code make it clear that no amount of unemployment compensation received as a result of a claimant's fraud will be exempt from taxation. Since this suggestion is consistent with the Service's position, a provision has been added to the proposed regulations stating that all amounts of fraudulently received unemployment compensation are taxable without regard to any limitation in section 85 of the Internal Revenue Code.

OTHER COMMENTS

Other comments were not adopted as they suggested changes that conflicted with express statutory provisions.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

These regulations are needed to guide the public and government employees responsible for the administration of section 85.

The preceding parts of the preamble evidence Service consideration of the public comments and respond to the issues raised by these comments. Evaluation of the effectiveness of the regulations after issuance will be based on comments received from offices within the Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department, other governmental agencies, State and local governments, and the public.

To a certain extent, section 6050B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 will require additional reporting and recordkeeping by payers of unemployment compensation, i.e., certain payers will be required to report to the Service the amount of their payment along with other information and will also be required to provide the recipient with a Form 1099 UC.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation was John G. Schmalz of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly the following amendments to 26 CFR Part 1 are hereby adopted:

Paragraph 1. Immediately after § 1.83-8, there is added the following new section:

---

[1] This publication of the Treasury Decision contains the complete text of the amendments to the regulations. The instructions for modifying the notice of proposed rulemaking have been omitted.

(a) Introduction. Section 85 prescribes rules relating to the inclusion in gross income of unemployment compensation (as defined in paragraph (b)(1) of this section) paid in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978 pursuant to governmental programs. In general, these rules provide that unemployment compensation paid pursuant to governmental programs is includible in the gross income of a taxpayer if the taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income (as defined in paragraph (b)(2) of this section) exceeds a statutory base amount (as defined in paragraph (b)(3) of this section). If there is such an excess, however, the amount included in gross income is limited under paragraph (c)(1) of this section to the lesser of one-half of such excess or the amount of the unemployment compensation. If such taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income does not exceed the applicable statutory base amount, none of the unemployment compensation is included in the taxpayer's gross income.

(b) Definitions — (1) Unemployment compensation— (i) General rule. Except as provided in paragraph (b)(1)(iii) of this section, the term "unemployment compensation" means any amount received under a law of the United States, or of a State, which is in the nature of unemployment compensation. Thus, section 85 applies only to unemployment compensation paid pursuant to governmental programs and does not apply to amounts paid pursuant to private nongovernmental unemployment compensation plans (which are includible in income without regard to section 85). Generally, unemployment compensation programs are those designed to protect taxpayers against the loss of income caused by involuntary layoff. Ordinarily, unemployment compensation is paid in cash and on a periodic basis. The amount of the payments is usually computed in accordance with a formula based on the taxpayer's length of prior employment and wages. Such payments, however, may be made in a lump sum or other than in cash or on some other basis.

(ii) Disability and worker's compensation payments. Amounts in the nature of unemployment compensation also include cash disability payments made pursuant to a governmental program as a substitute for cash unemployment payments to an unemployed taxpayer who is ineligible for such payments solely because of the disability. Usually these disability payments are paid in the same weekly amount and for the same period as the unemployment compensation benefits to which the unemployed taxpayer otherwise would have been entitled. Amounts received under workmen's compensation acts as compensation for personal injuries or sickness are not amounts in the nature of unemployment compensation. See section 104(a)(1) relating to the exclusion from gross income of such amounts.

(iii) Employee contributions to a governmental plan. If a governmental unemployment compensation program is funded in part by an employee's contribution which is not deductible by the employee, an amount paid to such employee under the program is not to be considered unemployment compensation until an amount equal to the total nondeductible contributions paid by the employee to such program has been paid to such employee.

(iv) Examples of governmental unemployment compensation programs. Governmental unemployment compensation programs include (but are not limited to) programs established under:

(A) A State law approved by the Secretary of Labor pursuant to section 3304 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(B) Chapter 85 of Title 5, United States Code, relating to unemployment compensation for Federal employees generally and for ex-servicemen.

(C) Trade Act of 1974, sections 231 and 232 (19 U.S.C. 2291 and 2292) [Pub. L. 93-618, 1975-1 C.B. 501].

(F) The Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, section 2 (45 U.S.C. 352).

(2) Modified adjusted gross income. The term "modified adjusted gross income" means the sum of the following amounts:

(i) Adjusted gross income (as defined in section 62);

(ii) All disability payments of the type that are eligible for exclusion from gross income under section 105(d); and

(iii) All amounts of unemployment compensation (as defined in paragraph (b)(1) of this section).

(3) Base amount. The term "base amount" means—

(i) $25,000 in the case of a joint return under section 6013.

(ii) Zero in the case of a taxpayer who—

(A) Is married (within the meaning of section 143) at the close of the taxable year,

(B) Does not file a joint return for such taxable year, and

(C) Does not live apart (as defined in paragraph (b)(4) of this section) from his or her spouse at all times during the taxable year.

(iii) $20,000 in the case of all other taxpayers.

(4) Living apart. A taxpayer does not "live apart" from his or her spouse at all times during a taxable year if for any period during the taxable year the taxpayer is a member of the same household as such taxpayer's spouse. A taxpayer is a member of a household for any period, including temporary absences due to special circumstances, during which the household is the taxpayer's place of abode. A temporary absence due to special circumstances includes a nonpermanent absence caused by illness, education, business, vacation, or military service.

(c) Limitations—(1) General rule. If for a taxable year, a taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income does not exceed the applicable statutory base amount, no amount of unemployment compensation is included in gross income for the taxable year. If there is such an excess, the taxpayer includes in gross income for the taxable year the lesser of the following:

(i) One-half of the excess of the taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income over such taxpayer's base amount, or

(ii) The amount of unemployment compensation.

(2) Exception for fraudulently received unemployment compensation. If a taxpayer fraudulently receives unemployment compensation under any governmental unemployment compensation program, then the entire amount of such fraudulently received unemployment compensation must be included in the taxpayer's gross income for the taxable year in which the benefits were received. Thus, the limitation in section 85 and in paragraph (c)(1) of this section, does not apply to such amounts.

(3) Examples. The application of this paragraph may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). H and W are married taxpayers who for calendar year 1979 file a joint income tax return. During 1979 H receives $4,500 of disability income that is eligible for an exclusion under section 105(d). W works for part of 1979 and receives $20,000 as compensation and also receives $5,000 of unemployment compensation in 1979. Assume that H and W's adjusted gross income is $20,000. The modified adjusted gross income of H and W is $29,500 ($4,500 + $20,000 + $5,000). Since their modified adjusted gross income ($29,500) is greater than their base amount ($25,000), some of the unemployment compensation received by W must be included in their gross income on their 1979 joint income tax return. Under paragraph (c)(1) of this section, of the $5,000 which is unemployment compensation, the lesser of $2,250 (($29,500 − 25,000) ÷ 2) or $5,000 must be included in their gross income. Thus, $2,250 of the $5,000 received by W in 1979 is included in the gross income of H and W on their joint income tax return for 1979.

Example (2). Assume the same facts in example (1) except H receives $5,000 of disability income that is eligible for an exclusion under section 105(d) and W receives $28,000 as compensation, and $4,000 which is unemployment compensation. Assume that H and W's adjusted gross income is $28,000. The modified adjusted gross income of H and W is $37,000 ($4,000 + $28,000 + $5,000). Since their modified adjusted gross income ($37,000) is greater than their base amount ($25,000), all of the unemployment compensation received by W must be included in their gross income on their 1979 joint income tax return. Under paragraph (c)(1) of this section, of the $4,000 which is unemployment compensation, the lesser of $6,000 (($37,000 − $25,000) ÷ 2) or $4,000 must be included in their gross income. Thus, all of the $4,000 unemployment compensation received by W is included in the gross income of H and W on their joint income tax return for 1979.

(d) Cross reference. See section 6050B, relating to the requirement that every person who makes payments of unemployment compensation aggregating $10 or more to any individual during any calendar year file an information return with the Internal Revenue Service.

Par. 2. Immediately after § 1.6050-1, there is added the following new section:

§ 1.6050B-1 Information returns by person making unemployment compensation payments.

For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, every person who makes payments of unemployment compensation (as defined in section 85(c)) aggregating $10 or more to any individual during any calendar year shall file a Form 1099UC in accordance with the instructions to such form.

Section 103.—Interest on Certain Governmental Obligations

(Also Section 61; 1.61-7.)

Arbitrage bonds; advance refunding issue; acquired obligations; matured Treasury bonds. The yield on matured Treasury bonds purchased in an escrow restructuring transaction with part of the proceeds of an issue of advance refunding bonds may not be taken into account in computing the yield on the major portion investments of the issue for the purpose of determining compliance with the arbitrage yield restrictions of section 103(c)(2) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-188

ISSUE

Will bonds that have been issued by an authority that is a political subdivision of a state be arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

Authority M is a hospital district that is a political subdivision of the state of O. On January 2, 1976, M issued its advance refunding bonds to refund construction bonds that were issued by M in 1975. The refunding bonds have a yield of 8 percent.

A major portion of the proceeds of the advance refunding bonds were immediately invested in United States Treasury obligations—State and Local Government Series (SLGS) at a restricted yield of 8 percent. Amounts representing a minor portion of the proceeds of the advance refunding bonds were immediately invested in SLGS at an unrestricted yield of 9 percent.

On February 4, 1980, M redeemed the SLGS that it had purchased in 1976 and used the proceeds to purchase United States Treasury bonds. M invested a minor portion of the proceeds of the redemption in United States Treasury bonds at an unrestricted yield. M invested part of the major portion of the proceeds of the redemption in United States Treasury bonds at a yield of 13 percent. M invested the remainder of the major portion of the proceeds of the redemption in United States Treasury bonds with a maturity date of February 1, 1980. M purchased all of the Treasury bonds at fair market value from A, an unrelated third person.

M directed the trustee for the advance refunding bonds not to redeem the Treasury bonds that matured on February 1, 1980, until five years had elapsed from the purchase of such bonds. In computing the yield on its major portion investments, M took into account the yield on the matured Treasury bonds as of the date the bonds would be presented for payment. As computed by M, the yield on all the Treasury bonds allocated to the major portion of the advance refunding bonds is 8 percent.

M allocated all of the costs of the purchase of the Treasury bonds to the minor portion of the escrow for the advance refunding bonds. At the time of the issuance of the advance refunding bonds M executed a no-arbitrage certification in accordance with the provisions of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(ii) of the proposed Income Tax Regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944).

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 103(a)(1) of the Code provides that gross income does not include interest on the obligations of a state or a political subdivision of a state.

Section 103(c)(1) of the Code provides that, with certain minor exceptions, the interest on any arbitrage bond will not be excludable from gross income.

Section 103(c)(2) of the Code provides that the term "arbitrage bond" means any obligation that is issued as part of an issue all or a major portion (more than 15 percent) of the proceeds of which are reasonably expected to be used directly or indirectly (A) to acquire securities or obligations that may be reasonably expected at the time of issuance of such issue, to produce a yield over the term of the issue that is materially higher than the yield on obligations of such issue, or (B) to replace funds that were used directly or indirectly to acquire securities or obligations described in section 103(c)(2)(A).

T.D. 7627 (44 F.R. 32657), 1979-2 C.B. 45, which adopted the final arbitrage bond regulations, provides that, for governmental obligations issued on or before the effective date of the final regulations (May 31, 1979), the proposed income tax regulations, as amended, under section 103(c) of the Code shall apply.

Section 1.103-13(a)(2)(i) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944), provides, in part, that under section 103(c)(2) of the Code the determination whether an obligation is an arbitrage bond depends upon the issuer's reasonable expectations, as of the date of issue, regarding the amount and use of the proceeds of the issue. The reasonable expectations regarding the amount and use of the proceeds of a governmental obligation may be established by the certification described in section 1.103-13(a)(2)(ii).

Example (1) of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(v) of the final regulations illustrates the effect of a no-arbitrage certification. In this example, city A issues bonds to construct a water treatment facility and in the certification A includes a statement that 85 percent of the receipts from the sale of the bonds will be used for construction costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds. Subsequently, construction of the water treatment facility was determined by the Environmental Protection Agency to have certain adverse effects. As a result, 85 percent of the receipts from the sale of the bonds will not be expended for project costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds. The example concludes that the certification is conclusive as to the issuer's reasonable expectations that 85 percent of the receipts will be expended for construction costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds.

Section 1.103-13(b)(4)(i) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944), provides that the term "acquired obligations" means securities and obligations allocated to the proceeds of an issue of governmental obligations during the period of time such issue is outstanding.

Section 1.103-13(b)(4)(iii) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944), provides that the term "obligation" means any evidence of indebtedness that is not described in section 103(a)(1) of the Code. An amendment to section 1.103-13(b)(4)(iii), published in the Federal Register of October 29, 1976 (41 F.R. 47680), provides that cash is not an acquired obligation. For example, cash held or received by a trustee is not taken into account as a zero-yield obligation for the period that it is held before being invested in an acquired obligation or for the period that it is held after repayment of an obligation and before being reinvested in an acquired obligation.

Section 1.103-13(b)(5) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of December 3, 1975 (40 F.R. 56448), provides, in part, that in the case of a refunding issue the yield produced by acquired obligations allocated to the proceeds (other than transferred proceeds) of the refunding issue is materially higher than the yield produced by such issue if the yield of such acquired obligations exceeds the yield of such issue.

The only reason M directed the trustee not to redeem the matured Treasury bonds at their face amount on the date they were purchased was to reduce the yield on the major portion of the bond proceeds. Therefore, for purposes of section 1.103-13(b)(4)(iii) of the proposed and final regulations the matured Treasury bonds purchased by M are considered paid and are the equivalent of cash. Accordingly, the yield on the matured Treasury bonds purchased by M may not be taken into account in computing the yield on the major portion investments for its advance refunding bonds. As a result, the yield on the major portion investments for M's advance refunding bonds is 13 percent.

The "reasonable expectations" test contained in section 103(c) of the Code and the certification procedure contained in section 1.103-13(a)(2) of the proposed and the final regulations both provide a high degree of certainty by generally assuring that the bonds will not be arbitrage bonds in the event of occurrences that are beyond the control of the issuer. Compare example (1) of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(v) of the final regulations which concerns the reasonable expectations of an issuer with respect to a matter it did not reasonably expect to occur and was beyond its control. However, neither the reasonable expectations test nor the certification procedure provides protection in this particular case where the issuer has taken deliberate and intentional actions to produce arbitrage.

HOLDING

M has failed to comply with the arbitrage yield restrictions of section 1.103-13(b)(5) of the proposed regulations. The no-arbitrage certification made by M will not prevent the advance refunding bonds from being arbitrage bonds. Thus, the advance refunding bonds issued by M are arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c)(2) of the Code and the interest on the bonds is not excludable from the gross income of the bondholders under section 103(a)(1).

(Also Section 61; 1.61-7.)

Arbitrage bonds; temporary investment of proceeds. A political subdivision of a city issued bonds to finance construction of a water distribution facility more than two years before construction of the facility was to begin and invested a major portion of the proceeds in higher-yielding certificates of deposit to generate cash income from the large spread between interest rates on taxable and tax-exempt obligations. Because the political subdivision did not act with due diligence, the bond proceeds do not qualify for investment at a materially higher yield for a temporary period. Therefore, the bonds are arbitrage bonds, and the interest received by the bondholders is not excludable from their gross incomes.

Rev. Rul. 80-204

ISSUE

Are the bonds issued by an authority that is a political subdivision of a city subject to the arbitrage yield restrictions of section 103(c) of the Internal Revenue Code with respect to the investment of the bond proceeds under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

On January 1, 1979, Authority M was created as a political subdivision of City O in order to consolidate under one administration the various utilities within O. The first major project that M will undertake is construction of a water distribution facility. Because M has no revenues with which to pay for the construction, M planned to issue bonds for this purpose. Such bonds would not be "industrial development bonds" within the meaning of section 103(b)(2) of the Code.

On September 1, 1979, M incurred a binding obligation to corporation X involving the expenditure of $500,000 for planning and engineering services in connection with the water distribution facility. Because of the nature of the services, X will be unable to complete the planning process before October 1, 1981. It is estimated that construction of the facility will begin in February 1982, and will be completed before August 31, 1982.

In accordance with ordinary financial practice, M would not issue bonds to pay for construction of the facility until the planning process was substantially completed. However, M issued $10,000,000 of 6 percent general obligation bonds on January 2, 1980. From the available bond proceeds of $9,400,000 (face amount minus costs of issuance and a portion of the $500,000 fee for planning and engineering), $8,400,000 was invested in a one-year certificate of deposit at a 12.5 percent interest rate, $500,000 was invested in a six-month certificate at 13 percent, and $500,000 was invested in a nine-month certificate at 12.5 percent.

The stated purpose of the abnormally early issuance is to take advantage of the large interest spread between taxable and tax-exempt obligations in order to generate cash income. The income will be used primarily to pay for the initial administrative costs of establishing M.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 103(a)(1) of the Code provides that gross income does not include interest on obligations of a state or a political subdivision of a state.

Section 103(c)(1) of the Code provides that, with certain minor exceptions, the interest on any arbitrage bond will not be excludable from gross income.

Section 103(c)(2) of the Code provides that the term "arbitrage bond" means any obligation that is issued as part of an issue all or a major portion (more than 15 percent) of the proceeds of which are reasonably expected to be used directly or indirectly (A) to acquire securities or obligations that may be reasonably expected at the time of issuance of such issue, to produce a yield over the term of the issue that is materially higher than the yield on obligations of such issue, or (B) to replace funds that were used directly or indirectly to acquire securities or obligations described in section 103(c)(2)(A).

Section 103(c)(4)(A) of the Code provides that an obligation shall not be treated as an arbitrage bond solely by reason of the fact that the proceeds of the issue of which such obligation is a part may be invested for a temporary period in securities or other obligations until such proceeds are needed for the purpose for which such issue was issued.

Section 1.103-14(b) of the Income Tax Regulations provides in general that original proceeds and investment proceeds of an issue of governmental obligations that are invested in acquired obligations during a 3-year period beginning on the date of issue are invested for a temporary period if the expenditure test of paragraph (b)(2), the time test of paragraph (b)(3), and the due diligence test of paragraph (b)(4) are satisfied. The time test requires that the issuer must incur a substantial binding obligation to commence the project within 6 months after the date of issue. The due diligence test provides that after the substantial binding obligation is incurred, work on the facility must proceed with due diligence to completion. The expenditure test provides that at least 85 percent of spendable proceeds (as defined in paragraph (b)(2)(iii)) must be spent within the temporary period.

When bonds are issued to finance a public project, the due diligence test is ordinarily satisfied whenever the issuer endeavors to spend the bond proceeds on the project with reasonable dispatch. In determining whether due diligence has been exercised, any legal, financial, engineering, or other obstacle to engaging in work on the project will ordinarily be taken into account.

In this case, however, actual construction of the water facility will not begin until more than two years after the date of issue. Moreover, M's purpose in proceeding with the bond issue prematurely was to secure an opportunity to invest the bond proceeds in higher yielding taxable obligations. Thus, M has deliberately acted to prolong the period between issuance of the bonds and expenditure of the proceeds, and has done so for the purpose of earning arbitrage. A deliberate act of this nature is inconsistent with the requirement of due diligence.

In these circumstances, M does not saitsfy the due diligence test of section 1.103-14(b)(4) of the regulations. However, this case is distinguishable from one where the date of issuance is determined solely with regard to bona fide financial or other nonarbitrage reasons (for example, where financing for one project is combined with financing for several others solely for economies of scale and other bond marketing advantages).

HOLDING

The bond proceeds do not qualify for investment at a materially higher yield during a temporary period described in section 1.103-14(b) of the regulations. Further, the bonds are arbitrage bonds, and the interest received by the bondholders is not excludable from their gross incomes under section 103(a)(1) of the Code.

Section 501.—Exemption from Tax on Corporations, Certain Trusts, Etc.

26 CFR 1.501(c)(4)-1: Civic organizations and local associations of employees.

Recreational facility; restricted use. The Service will not follow the Eden Hall Farm decision, which held that an organization providing recreational facilities for employees of selected corporations qualifies as a social welfare organization under section 501(c)(4) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-205

ISSUE

Will the Internal Revenue Service follow the decision in Eden Hall Farm v. United States, 389 F. Supp. 858 (W.D. Pa. 1975), which held that an organization providing recreational facilities to the employees of selected corporations qualifies for exemption from federal income tax as a social welfare organization described in section 501(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization was formed to carry out the provisions of the will of a former employee of the X corporation. Management of the organization was vested in a board of three trustees, all of whom were required to be employees of the X corporation. The organization's activities have consisted of maintaining and operating guest and recreational facilities on a farm near the community in which the X corporation is located.

In its initial years of operation, the organization's facilities were made available only to employees of the X corporation. In subsequent years, the facilities were opened to guests of X corporation's employees, employees of other selected corporations, and guests of these other employees. During the years considered by the district court, the facilities were used predominantly by employees of X corporation.

The district court found that the organization's provision of recreational facilities served a recognized community need and that the organization qualified as a social welfare organization under section 501(c)(4) of the Code. With respect to the organization's restrictions on the use of its facility, the court found that the restrictions were consistent with the capacity of the facilities and provided a means of limiting use of the facilities to those who met the organization's requirements. Thus, the court concluded that the organization was not operated for the benefit of X corporation or its employees.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(4) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of civic leagues or organizations not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare.

Section 1.501(c)(4)-1(a)(2)(i) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that an organization is operated for the promotion of social welfare if it is primarily engaged in promoting in some way the common good and general welfare of the people of the community.

The regulations clearly require, and prior revenue rulings have recognized, that an organization claiming exemption under section 501(c)(4) of the Code must operate for the benefit of the community as a whole rather than for the benefit of a limited group. Compare Rev. Rul. 78-69, 1978-1 C.B. 156, which holds that an organization providing rush hour commuter bus service to all residents of a community qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(4), with Rev. Rul. 55-311, 1955-1 C.B. 72, which holds that a local association of employees operating a bus primarily for the convenience of its members does not so qualify. Also compare Rev. Rul. 62-167, 1962-2 C.B. 142, which holds that an organization retransmitting television signals for the benefit of an entire community qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(4), with Rev. Rul. 54-394, 1954-2 C.B. 131, which holds that an organization providing television on a cooperative basis does not qualify.

There is no requirement that a section 501(c)(4) organization provide equal benefits to every member of the community. The organization described in Rev. Rul. 78-69 that provides rush hour commuter bus service benefits only those individuals who have a need for that service. Similarly, an organization providing a particular type of recreational facility benefits only those who enjoy that type of recreation. Such limitations are inherent in the activities that are undertaken to promote the social welfare.

In the instant case, however, the organization imposed limitations on the use of its facility other than those that were inherent in the nature of the facility. By restricting use of the facility to employees of selected corporations and their guests, the organization is primarily benefiting a private group rather than primarily benefiting the common good and general welfare of the community.

It is the position of the Internal Revenue Service that organizations restricting their benefits in this way do not qualify for exemption as organizations described in section 501(c)(4) of the Code. Organizations of this type primarily benefit the individuals or private groups that are allowed to use the facility and any benefit to the community or promotion of the social welfare of the community is purely incidental.

HOLDING

The Internal Revenue Service will not follow the decision in Eden Hall Farm v. United States. It is the position of the Service that an organization providing recreational facilities to the employees of selected corporations does not qualify for exemption from federal income tax as a social welfare organization under section 501(c)(4) of the Code.

Tenants' rights. A nonprofit organization that promotes the legal rights of tenants in a particular community and occasionally initiates litigation to contest the validity of legislation adversely affecting tenants may qualify for exemption under section 501(c)(4) of the Code as a social welfare organization; Rev. Rul. 73-306 distinguished.

Rev. Rul. 80-206

ISSUE

May an organization formed to promote the legal rights of all tenants in a particular community and occasionally to initiate litigation to contest the validity of legislation that adversely affects tenants qualify for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code as a social welfare organization?

FACTS

The organization was formed to promote the legal rights of tenants in a particular community. To accomplish this objective, it publishes a newsletter and conducts public meetings dealing with matters of concern to tenants. It also operates an information center that provides tenants with answers concerning their rights and obligations under lease agreements with their landlords. In order to present the views of tenants with respect to laws and regulations that affect them, the organization regularly testifies before administrative and legislative bodies. Occasionally, the organization initiates litigation to contest the validity of legislation it feels will adversely affect tenants in the county.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(4) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of civic leagues or organizations not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare.

Section 1.501(c)(4)-1(a)(2)(i) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that an organization is operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare if it is primarily engaged in promoting in some way the common good and general welfare of the people of the community. An organization embraced within this section is one which is operated primarily for the purpose of bringing about civic betterments and social improvements.

Rev. Rul. 73-306, 1973-2 C.B. 179, holds that a nonprofit organization formed to represent member-tenants of an apartment complex in negotiations with landlords, in litigation, and before local and federal regulatory agencies with respect to matters of mutual concern to the tenants does not qualify for exemption under section 501(c)(4) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 73-306 is distinguishable because in that revenue ruling the organization's activities are directed primarily toward benefitting its member-tenants rather than, as in the instant case, all tenants in the community.

By promoting the legal rights of tenants in a particular community under the circumstances described above, the organization is promoting the common good and general welfare of the people of the community.

HOLDING

A nonprofit organization that promotes the legal rights of all tenants in a particular community and occasionally initiates litigation to contest the validity of legislation adversely affecting tenants may qualify for exemption under section 501(c)(4) of the Code as a social welfare organization.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1024, Application for Recognition of Exemption Under Section 501(a) or for Determination Under Section 120, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(4) of the Code. See section 1.501(a)-1 of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1024, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 73-306 is distinguished.

26 CFR 1.509(a)-4: Supporting organizations.

Private foundations; supporting organization; control of board by disqualified person. An organization that is exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code makes distributions to a university. The organization is controlled by a four member board of directors, one of whom is a substantial contributor to the organization and a disqualified person. Two other directors are employees of a corporation, also a disqualified person, in which more than 35 percent of the voting power is owned by the substantial contributor. The remaining director is chosen by the university. None of the directors has a veto power. The organization is not a supporting organization within the meaning of section 509 (a)(3).

Rev. Rul. 80-207

ISSUE

Is an organization which makes distributions to a university, under the circumstances described below, a supporting organization within the meaning of section 509(a)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code if it is controlled by a disqualified person and the employees of a disqualified person?

FACTS

The organization is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. Its purpose is to make distributions to a university described in section 509(a)(1) and section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii).

The organization is controlled by a four member board of directors. One of these directors is a substantial contributor to the organization. Two other directors are employees of a business corporation of which more than 35 percent of the voting power is owned by the substantial contributor. The remaining director is chosen by the university. None of the directors has a veto power over the organization's actions.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 509(a)(3)(C) of the Code provides that in order to qualify as other than a private foundation under section 509(a)(3), an organization may not be controlled directly or indirectly by one or more disqualified persons (as defined in section 4946) other than foundation managers and other than one or more organizations described in section 509(a)(1) or (2).

Section 4946 provides that the term "disqualified person" includes a substantial contributor to an organization, and a corporation of which a substantial contributor owns more than 35 percent of the total combined voting power.

Section 1.509(a)-4(j) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a supporting organization will be considered to be controlled directly or indirectly by one or more disqualified persons if the voting power of such persons is 50 percent or more of the total voting power of the organization's governing body or if one or more of such persons has the right to exercise veto power over the actions of the organization. However, all pertinent facts and circumstances will be taken into consideration in determining whether a disqualified person does in fact indirectly control an organization.

Because only one of the organization's directors is a disqualified person and neither the disqualified person nor any other director has a veto power over the organization's actions, the organization is not directly controlled by a disqualified person under section 1.509(a)-4(j) of the regulations. However, in determining whether an organization is indirectly controlled by one or more disqualified persons, one circumstance to be considered is whether a disqualified person is in a position to influence the decisions of members of the organization's governing body who are not themselves disqualified persons. Thus, employees of a disqualified person will be considered in determining whether one or more disqualified persons controls 50 percent or more of the voting power of an organization's governing body.

Two of the organization's four directors are also employees of a corporation that is itself a disqualified person because more than 35 percent of its voting power is owned by a disqualified person. Because a majority of its board of directors consists of a disqualified person and employees of a disqualified person, the organization is indirectly controlled by disqualified persons within the meaning of section 509(a)(3)(C) of the Code.

HOLDING

Since the organization is controlled by a disqualified person and the employees of a disqualified person, under the circumstances described above, it is not a supporting organization within the meaning of section 509(a)(3) of the Code.

Taiwan Relations Act. The tax implications of the Taiwan Relations Act are discussed.

Rev. Rul. 80-208

ISSUES

(1) Are the Internal Revenue Code provisions that are applicable to foreign governments applicable to Taiwan?

(2) Is the American Institute in Taiwan (the Institute) exempt from United States taxation?

(3) How are employees of the Institute treated for federal income tax purposes?

LAW AND HOLDINGS

(1) Section 4(a) of the Taiwan Relations Act (the Act), Pub. L. No. 96-8, 1979-1 C.B. 459, provides that the laws of the United States shall apply with respect to Taiwan in the manner that the laws of the United States applied with respect to Taiwan prior to January 1, 1979.

Section 4(c) of the Act provides that for all purposes the Congress approves the continuation in force of all treaties and all other international agreements, including multilateral conventions, entered into by the United States and the governing authorities on Taiwan, which were in force between them on December 31, 1978, unless and until terminated in accordance with law.

Thus, all laws, including the Internal Revenue Code, treaties, international agreements, and conventions between the United States and Taiwan that were in force on December 31, 1978, are continued in force unless and until terminated by law.

(2) Section 8 of the Act provides that the Institute, its property, and its income are exempt from all taxation imposed by the United States or any state or local taxing authority of the United States, except to the extent provided for in section 11(a)(3) of the Act relating to the Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA), which may apply to certain employees of the Institute. The FICA provisions will apply for Institute employees, who before becoming Institute employees were employees of any agency of the United States covered by FICA and upon termination of their Institute employment are entitled to reemployment or reinstatement with such agency, since section 11(a)(3) of the Act requires that such employees have their benefits (including FICA benefits) continued during their Institute employment.

(3) Section 11(d)(1) of the Act provides that for purposes of sections 911 and 913 of the Code amounts paid by the Institute to its employees shall not be treated as earned income. Also, amounts received by employees of the Institute shall not be included in gross income, and shall be exempt from taxation, to the extent that they are equivalent to amounts received by civilian officers and employees of the Government of the United States as allowances and benefits that are exempt from taxation under section 912.

Section 2001.—Imposition and Rate of Tax

26 CFR 20.0-1: Introduction.
(Also Section 2101; 20.2101-1.)

Domicile; illegal alien. An illegal alien who lived in the U.S. for 19 years with the alien's family, purchased a residence, and established strong community ties was domiciled in the U.S. at the date of death and the taxable estate is subject to the tax imposed by section 2001 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-209

ISSUE

For purposes of the federal estate tax imposed by section 2001 of the Internal Revenue Code, was a person who entered the United States illegally and who continued to live in the United States until death a resident of the United States at the date of death?

FACTS

The decedent entered the United States illegally in 1959. Two years later, the decedent's spouse also entered the United States illegally. Up to the date of death in 1978, the decedent continued to remain in the United States. The decedent never secured a visa from the Government, nor did the decedent ever apply for and receive official permission to reside in the United States. Therefore, the decedent was at all times after entering the United States subject to the laws regarding deportation of aliens.

In 1963, the decedent purchased a home in the United States and resided there until death. The decedent was, during the fifteen years prior to death, a member of several local clubs and an active participant in community affairs.

In 1964 and in 1972, the decedent purchased real property in the decedent's native country through the services of an agent. After the purchases, the properties were leased to a succession of tenants.

The representatives of the decedent's estate have argued that the decedent was not a resident of the United States and that the real property located in the decedent's native country is not includible in the federal gross estate.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2001(a) of the Code imposes a tax on the transfer of the taxable estate of "every decedent who is a citizen or resident of the United States." The tax imposed by section 2001(a) applies, in general, to property owned by a resident of the United States regardless of where the property is located.

Section 2101 of the Code imposes a separate tax on the transfer of the taxable estate of "every decedent nonresident not a citizen of the United States." Under section 2103, the gross estate of a nonresident who is not a United States citizen includes, for purposes of the tax imposed by section 2101, only property situated in the United States.

Section 20.0-1(b)(1) of the Estate Tax Regulations defines the term "resident" as follows:

> A "resident" decedent is a decedent who, at the time of his death, had his domicile in the United States. . . . A person acquires a domicile in a place by living there, for even a brief period of time, with no definite present intention of later removing therefrom. Residence without the requisite intention to remain indefinitely will not suffice to constitute domicile, nor will intention to change domicile effect such a change unless accompanied by actual removal.

The question of whether the taxable estate of a decedent who is not a United States citizen is subject to the federal estate tax under section 2001 of the Code depends upon where the decedent was domiciled at the date of death.

The requirements for acquiring a domicile are (1) legal capacity to do so; (2) physical presence; and (3) a current intention to make a home in the place. Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 15, Comment a (1971).

Legal capacity to acquire a domicile of choice has been found to exist even when people are subject to transfer to another domicile at the direction of others. See, e.g., Stifel v. Hopkins, 477 F.2d 1116, 1120 (6th Cir. 1973). Therefore, the fact that the decedent was subject to deportation does not render the decedent legally incapable of acquiring a domicile.

Because the decedent was physically present in this country at the date of death, the decedent would have been domiciled in the United States if the decedent had a current intention to make the United States a home. However, once a person has established a domicile in one place, it is presumed to continue in that place until it is shown to have been changed. Mitchell v. United States, 88 U.S. (21 Wall.) 350 (1874). The presumption can be rebutted upon facts showing an intention to remain in the United States for an indefinite period or on a permanent basis. See generally, Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 18, comment d (1971). Some of the factors used in determining such requisite intention are home ownership, local community ties and living with one's family in the claimed domicile. See Farmer's Loan & Trust Co. v. United States, 60 F.2d 618 (S.D.N.Y. 1932).

In the present case, the fact that the decedent lived in the United States for a long time with the decedent's family and that the decedent established strong community ties indicates an absence of any fixed intention of returning to the native country.

The purchase of property located in a person's native country is not sufficient to conclude that the decedent was not domiciled in the United States, especially since the location of an investment is not indicative of domicile. See Rodiek v. Commissioner, 33 B.T.A. 1020, 1034 (1936), affirmed, 87 F.2d 328 (2nd Cir. 1937), Ct. D. 1229, 1937-1 C.B. 290. The facts in the present case thus indicate that the decedent intended to remain in the United States indefinitely.

HOLDING

The decedent was domiciled in the United States at the date of death. Therefore, the taxable estate of the decedent is subject to the federal estate tax imposed by section 2001 of the Code. Further, the same conclusion would result, under the facts presented, if the decedent had entered the United States legally in 1959 as a nonimmigrant holding a visa and had remained in the United States after the visa expired. Even though such a decedent, at the time of entry, may not have had the intent to remain in the United States, nevertheless, that decedent may subsequently form the intent to remain in the United States indefinitely and establish domicile in the United States.

Section 2013.—Credit for Tax on Prior Transfers

(Also Section 2056; 20.2056(c)-1.)

Credits against tax; prior transfers; marital deduction. In determining the credit for tax on prior transfers under the "second limitation" of section 2013(c)(1) of the Code, for purposes of computing the tax on the reduced adjusted gross estate of a decedent who died after 1976, the applicable marital deduction is the value of the property actually passing to the surviving spouse, but not to exceed the greater of $250,000 or one-half of the reduced adjusted gross estate; Rev. Rul. 60-161 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-210

ISSUE

In determining the "second limitation" on the credit for tax on prior transfers under section 2013(c)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code, what is the applicable marital deduction used in computing the estate tax on the reduced gross estate, under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

D died in May 1979, leaving a surviving spouse, S. D had made no gifts after December 31, 1976. The value of the gross estate included on the federal estate tax return was $600,000, and debts and expenses in the amount of $40,000 were claimed as deductions. D bequeathed to S an amount equal to one-half of the federal adjusted gross estate. Thus, S received $280,000 ($\frac{1}{2} \times$ $560,000), and a marital deduction was claimed for that amount. A tax on prior transfer credit was claimed under section 2013 of the Code based on a transfer of $100,000 that D received from the estate of D's parent, who died in November 1977.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2013 of the Code provides, in general, that a transferee's estate is allowed a credit for the estate tax paid on property transferred to the transferee from a transferor who died within ten years before, or within two years after, the transferee's death. The amount of the credit is the lesser of two limitations.

The "second limitation", as prescribed in section 2013(c)(1) of the Code and section 20.2013-3 of the Estate Tax Regulations, provides that the amount of the credit shall not exceed the amount by which (A) the transferee's estate tax, computed after the allowance of all credits except the credit for tax on prior transfers, exceeds (B) such tax computed by excluding from the transferee's gross estate the value of the transferred property.

Section 2056 of the Code provides, with certain limitations, a deduction from the value of the gross estate for the value of the property that passes from the decedent to the surviving spouse. For estates of decedents dying before January 1, 1977, section 2056(c) provided that the amount of the marital deduction was limited to one-half of the value of the adjusted gross estate. The Tax Reform Act of 1976, Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, amended section 2056(c) for estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976, to provide generally that the marital deduction shall not exceed the greater of $250,000 or one-half of the adjusted gross estate.

Rev. Rul. 60-161, 1960-1 C.B. 367, provides that if a marital deduction under section 2056 of the Code is allowable in the transferee's estate, then, in computing the estate tax on the reduced gross estate (the gross estate less the value of the transferred property) under section 2013(c)(1)(B), the applicable marital deduction is the value of the property passing to the surviving spouse, but not to exceed one-half of the reduced adjusted gross estate (the adjusted gross estate less the value of the transferred property).

In computing the estate tax on the reduced gross estate in accordance with section 2013(c)(1)(B) of the Code, for estates of transferees dying after December 31, 1976, the applicable marital deduction is the value of the property passing to the surviving spouse, but not to exceed, generally, the greater of $250,000 or one-half of the reduced adjusted gross estate.

In this case the value of the property passing to the surviving spouse is $280,000 and the reduced adjusted gross estate equals $460,000 ($600,000 gross estate less $100,000 transferred property less $40,000 debts and expenses). The maximum marital deduction allowable in computing the estate tax on the reduced estate is therefore $250,000; the value of the property passing to the surviving spouse ($280,000), but not to exceed the greater of $250,000 or one-half of the reduced adjusted gross estate ($230,000).

HOLDING

In determining the "second limitation" on the credit for tax on prior transfers under section 2013(c)(1) of the Code, the applicable marital deduction in this case is $250,000.

II. This authority may be redelegated to Division Directors and Branch Chiefs. In the case of granting extensions of time for filing applications for change in accounting method and accounting period not involving precedent issues this authority may be redelegated to the Chief of Ruling Section 1, Corporation Tax Branch.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

U.S.-British Virgin Islands Income Tax Treaty—Public Meeting

Announcement 80-96 [1]

The Treasury Department will hold a public meeting on August 19, 1980, to solicit the views of interested persons on issues being considered in the negotiation of a new income tax treaty to replace the treaty currently in force between the United States and the British Virgin Islands [1947-1 C.B. 209].

The public meeting will be held at the Treasury Department, at 2:00 p.m., in room 4121. Persons interested in attending are requested to give notice in writing by August 8, 1980, of their intention to attend. Notices should be addressed to H. David Rosenbloom, International Tax Counsel, Department of the Treasury, Washington, D.C. 20220.

The present treaty is a 1958 extension to the British Virgin Islands of the then current income tax treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom. The need to revise the treaty has arisen out of two principal considerations: the fact that many of the provisions of the present treaty are either outdated or not relevant to the economic relationships between the United States and the British Virgin Islands and the fact that certain persons may receive benefits of the treaty in ways which were not intended at the time the treaty was extended to the British Virgin Islands.

The announcement of the public meeting follows the recent conclusion of a series of discussions between representatives of the United States and the British Virgin Islands. On the basis of these discussions, it is agreed that the general form of the new treaty will be patterned after the U.S. Model treaty and a new U.S.-U.K. treaty [1980-21 I.R.B. 5]. It is also agreed, however, that the new treaty with the British Virgin Islands will provide for rates of withholding tax at source on dividends, interest, and royalties of at least 15 percent. The new treaty will also include an article patterned after Article 16 of the U.S. Model treaty, designed to deny benefits of reduced U.S. withholding rates on dividends, interest, and royalties paid to a British Virgin Islands corporation in certain circumstances. Transitional rules for certain transactions entered into prior to July 1, 1980, are contemplated.

The Treasury seeks the views of interested persons in regard to this agreement, as well as other matters relevant to an income tax treaty between the United States and the British Virgin Islands. The August 19 public meeting is being held to provide an opportunity for an exchange of views, as well as for the purpose of discussing the United States position in regard to the issues presented in the negotiations.

Carryover Basis Forms Obsoleted

Effective August 1, 1980, Form 5970, Information Notice to IRS as Required by IRC Section 6039A(a), and Form 5970-A, Election of Carryover Basis, are obsolete.

The Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, Pub. L. 96-223, 1980-3 C.B. 2, 71, repealed the carryover basis rules of section 1023 of the Internal Revenue Code. However, a provision of this law allowed the personal representatives of the estates of decedents who died after December 31, 1976, and before November 7, 1978, to elect carryover basis rules during a 120 day period after enactment of the law. The period for the election ended on July 31, 1980.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 162.—Trade or Business Expenses

26 CFR 1.162-1: Business expenses.

Business expenses; punitive damages. Amounts paid by a corporation as punitive damages that arose as a result of a civil lawsuit against the corporation for breach of contract and fraud in connection with the ordinary conduct of its business activities are deductible as ordinary and necessary business expenses.

Rev. Rul. 80-211

ISSUE

Are amounts paid as punitive damages that are incurred in the ordinary conduct of the taxpayer's business operations deductible as an ordinary and necessary business expense under section 162 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

X, a domestic corporation, deducted a payment identified as punitive damages as an ordinary and necessary business expense. X's obligation to make such payment arose as a result of a civil lawsuit in which X was sued by Y, another domestic corporation, for breach of contract and fraud in connection with the ordinary conduct of its business activities. Judgment was rendered against X by the court.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 162 of the Code provides that there shall be allowed as a deduction all the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business.

Section 162(c) of the Code provides that no deduction shall be allowed under section 162(a) for any illegal payment, bribe, kickback, or rebate when made under any of the circumstances or to or by any of the persons described in section 162(c).

Section 1.162-1(a) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that business expenses deductible from gross income include the ordinary and necessary expenditures directly connected with or pertaining to the taxpayer's trade or business.

In applying these provisions, the courts and the Service have recognized that payments made in settlement of lawsuits are deductible if the acts which gave rise to the litigation were performed in the ordinary conduct of the taxpayer's business. See, for example, Rev. Rul. 78-210, 1978-1 C.B. 39; Rev. Rul. 69-491, 1969-2 C.B. 22; Kornhauser v. United States, 276 U.S. 145, T.D. 4222, VII-2 C.B. 267 (1928); Mulgrew Blacktop, Inc. v. United States, 311 F. Supp. 570 (S.D. Iowa 1969); and Cochrane v. Commissioner, 23 B.T.A. 202 (1931), acq. X-2 C.B. 14 (1931).

The Senate Finance Committee in S. Rept. 91-522, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. (1969), 1969-3 C.B. 423, 597, stated that the additions to section 162 of the Code made in section 902 of the Tax Reform Act of 1969, 1969-3 C.B. 10, 147, denying deductions for the following expenditures were intended to be all inclusive (Emphasis added): fines or similar penalties paid to a government for violation of any law, a portion of treble damage payments under the antitrust laws, bribes to public officials, and other unlawful bribes or "kickbacks".

In the present situation X was sued by another corporation for fraudulent acts and contractual violations perpetuated in the ordinary conduct of its business activities. Therefore, payment of the judgment by X, including amounts identified as punitive damages, is an ordinary and necessary cost of doing business. Further, the action against X is not based upon any of the prohibited activities described in section 162(c) of the Code.

HOLDING

Amounts paid as punitive damages incurred by the taxpayer in the ordinary conduct of its business operations are deductible as an ordinary and necessary business expense under section 162 of the Code.

(Also Sections 274, 3401; 1.274-5, 31.3401 (a)-1.)

Per diem allowance; away from home. An employee who participated in a 12-month executive training program at various offices throughout the country pending reassignment in a new location was away from home and could exclude from gross income a per diem allowance paid by the employer. The per diem allowance was not wages subject to income tax withholding.

Rev. Rul. 80-212

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, is a taxpayer who participates in a training program of the taxpayer's employer considered "away from home" within the meaning of section 162(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

X, a corporation, conducts a training program whereby potential and current executives are given extensive classroom and on-the-job training at various offices of X throughout the United States. The participants in the training program are relieved of their job responsibilities immediately after selection for the program, their positions are filled by others, and they are assigned to 12 months of training. The purpose of the program is to provide X with a continuing supply of administrators to cope with the management problems of a complex organization. After satisfactorily completing the 12 months of training, the participants are to be given a permanent appointment to fill an executive vacancy in one of X's offices. It is a virtual certainty that this permanent appointment will be at a location different from where the participant worked when selected by X for the program.

A, an unmarried individual who uses the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting and files returns on a calendar year basis, was assigned to the program described above effective September 1, 1978. A had been employed regularly by X in city M since January 1973, and had been renting an apartment in M for 35*x* dollars a month. After A's assignment to the program, A did not perform any duties for X in the vicinity of M, A's position in M was filled by another individual, and A had no reasonable expectation of returning to M to work. However, A's various administrative records continued to be kept in M and X continued to designate M as A's official assignment office.

On August 31, 1979, A satisfactorily completed the 12-month training program of X. During that time A traveled to numerous offices of X throughout the country for short temporary periods to observe the various functions in those offices. A lived in motels and ate all meals in restaurants. A continued to maintain the apartment in city M. During this 12-month period, A returned to M at various times totalling 30 days. A stayed in the apartment, visited friends, attended to personal business matters, and generally maintained community contacts. A continued to maintain a post office box and bank account in M as well as a driver's license and voter registration for the state in which M is located. A also purchased insurance and filed tax returns in the state in which M is located during the 12-month period. A received a permanent assignment on September 1, 1979, to a new place of business.

During the training period while A was away from city M, X paid A a per diem amount based on the cost of living in the area where A was physically located at the particular time. A was required to and did provide an adequate accounting to X for all expenditures, and such expenditures were reasonable in amount. The per diem amounts were not in excess of such expenditures. A did not report the per diem amounts received during the training period in gross income.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 274 of the Code and the regulations thereunder provide rules for reporting and substantiation of certain expenses paid or incurred by taxpayers in connection with the performance of services as employees.

Section 1.274-5(e)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that, for purposes of computing tax liability, an employee need not report on the employee's tax return "business expenses" for travel, transportation, entertainment, gifts and similar purposes, paid or incurred solely for the benefit of the employer for which the employee is required to, and does, make an adequate accounting to the employer and which are charged directly or indirectly to the employer or for which the employee is paid through advances, reimbursements, or otherwise, provided that the total amount of such advances, reimbursements, and charges is equal to such expenses. Therefore, provided these requirements are met, the employee need not report such reimbursements in gross income.

Section 1.274-5(e)(1) of the regulations provides generally that the term "business expenses" means ordinary and necessary expenses for travel, entertainment, or gifts which are deductible under section 162 of the Code, and the regulations thereunder. Thus, the term "business expenses" does not include personal, living or family expenses disallowed by section 262, and advances, reimbursements, or allowances for such expenditures must be reported as income by the employee.

Section 162(a)(2) of the Code provides that there shall be allowed as a deduction all the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on a trade or business, including traveling expenses (including amounts expended for meals and lodging other than amounts which are lavish or extravagant under the circumstances) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business.

In this case A made an adequate accounting to X for all the expenses incurred. The per diem amounts were not in excess of such expenses, and the expenses were not lavish or extravagant. Therefore, whether A must report the per diem amounts received from X in gross income depends on whether A's travel expenses were paid or incurred while "away from home" within the meaning of section 162(a)(2) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 73-529, 1973-2 C.B. 37, provides that generally a taxpayer's "home" for purposes of section 162(a)(2) of the Code is considered to be located at (1) the taxpayer's regular or principal (if more than one regular) place of business, or (2) if the taxpayer has no regular or principal place of business because of the nature of the trade or business, then at the taxpayer's regular place of abode in a real and substantial sense. If the taxpayer comes within neither category (1) nor category (2), the taxpayer is considered to be an itinerant who has a "home" wherever the taxpayer happens to work, and thus is not "away from home" for traveling expense deduction purposes. The revenue ruling further provides that there are three objective factors that may be used to determine, with respect to the taxable year in question, the bona fide nature of an assertion that the taxpayer's claimed abode is the taxpayer's "regular place of abode in a real and substantial sense." They are:

(1) Whether the taxpayer performs a portion of the taxpayer's business in the vicinity of the claimed abode and uses such abode (for purposes of lodging) while performing such business there;

(2) Whether the taxpayer's living expenses incurred at the claimed abode are duplicated because the taxpayer's business requires travel away therefrom; and

(3) Whether the taxpayer—

(a) has not abandoned the vicinity in which the historical place of lodging and claimed abode are both located,

(b) has a member or members of the taxpayer's family (marital or lineal only) currently residing at the claimed abode, or

(c) uses the claimed abode frequently for purposes of lodging.

The Service will recognize that a taxpayer has a "home" for traveling expense deduction purposes if the taxpayer claims an abode and, under bona fide circumstances, satisfies all three objective factors set forth above. If a taxpayer, under bona fide circumstances, satisfies only two of the three objective factors set forth above, then all the facts and circumstances of the case will be subjected to close scrutiny to determine whether the taxpayer has a "home" for traveling expense deduction purposes in the form of a regular place of abode in a real and substantial sense. If a taxpayer fails to satisfy at least two of the three objective factors set forth above, the taxpayer will be regarded as having a "home" wherever the taxpayer happens to work, and thus cannot be "away from home" for purposes of section 162(a)(2) of the Code.

After A was assigned to the program on September 1, 1978, A did not have a regular or principal place of business in city M because A was released from all job responsibility in M and had no reasonable expectation of returning there to work. The fact that A's administrative records continued to be kept at M and that A's assignments were issued from M does not change this conclusion. Nor did A have a regular or principal place of business in any other location because A's training assignments were temporary pending permanent assignment on September 1, 1979. Therefore, whether A was away from home depends on a determination of where A's regular place of abode was in a real and substantial sense while A was a participant in the training program.

Applying the three objective factors listed above to A's situation during the time period September 1, 1978, to August 31, 1979, A did not satisfy factor (1) because A did not perform any business in the vicinity of city M. However, A did satisfy factor (2) because A did duplicate living expenses incurred in M in that A continued to rent the apartment. A also satisfied factor (3) because A had not abandoned the vicinity in which A's historical place of lodging and claimed abode were located in that A maintained the apartment in M and also returned to M to generally maintain community contacts there. In addition, A did use the claimed abode frequently for purposes of lodging.

Based on all the facts and circumstances of this case, including the satisfaction of factors (2) and (3) and the additional contacts with city M that A maintained (such as maintaining a post office box and bank account in M, maintaining a driver's license and voter registration for the state in which M is located, and purchasing insurance and filing tax returns in the state in which M is located during the 12-month period), A is considered to have had a home in M in the form of a regular place of abode in a real and substantial sense during the period from September 1, 1978, to August 31, 1979.

HOLDING

Because A's home in the form of a regular place of abode in a real and substantial sense remained in city M during the training period which lasted through August 31, 1979, A was "away from home" during the 12-month training period. Therefore, during that time, A need not report any per diem allowance received from X in gross income. In addition, the per diem allowance is not considered "wages" subject to income tax withholding pursuant to section 31.3401(a)-1(b)(2) of the Employment Tax Regulations.

26 CFR 1.301-1: Rules applicable with respect to distribution of money and other property.

"Stapled," "paired," or "back-to-back" stock; valuation. Factors are set forth that should be considered, in addition to those in Rev. Rul. 59-60, in valuing the stock of a subsidiary corporation that is distributed to the shareholders of the former parent and that can be sold only with the stock of the distributing corporation; Rev. Rul. 59-60 amplified.

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to provide information and guidance to taxpayers, Internal Revenue Service personnel, and others concerned with the valuation for federal tax purposes, of stock of a subsidiary corporation that is distributed to the shareholders of the former parent and can be sold only with the stock of the distributing corporation. Such stock is referred to as "stapled," "paired" or "back-to-back" stock.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

There are variations in the methods by which stapling arrangements are created, but they generally have the following features in common: (a) An existing domestic corporation organizes a new foreign affiliate to conduct business in a foreign country. The affiliate is usually organized in a country with lower tax rates than the United States or that offers other tax advantages. (b) The affiliate issues the same number of shares as the parent company has outstanding. (c) The shares of the affiliate are distributed ratably to the shareholders of the domestic corporation. (d) The shares of the two companies are stapled or paired so that they can be transferred only as a unit. (e) There is generally a close association in the operations of the two companies.

The distribution by the parent of the subsidiary stock to the parent's shareholders under these circumstances is a distribution of property to the shareholders within the meaning of section 301(a) of the Internal Revenue Code and will be includable in the gross incomes of the parent's shareholders as a dividend distribution to the extent provided in section 301(c) and section 316. Rev. Rul. 54-140, 1954-1 C.B. 116. Also, see Wilkinson v. Commissioner, 29 T.C. 421 (1957), nonacq., 1960-2 C.B. 8.

SEC. 3. NATURE OF THE PROBLEM

In many instances the stock of the distributing company is publicly traded on one of the organized exchanges or in the over-the-counter market. Therefore, market quotations are available for the stock of the distributing company prior to the distribution and for the stapled stock after the distribution. There are no market transactions solely in the stock of the distributed corporation. Consequently, some other measure of its value must be used.

Rev. Rul. 59-60, 1959-1 C.B. 237, outlines and reviews in general, the approach, methods and factors to be considered in valuing shares of capital stock of closely held corporations. The methods discussed therein also apply to the valuation of corporate stocks in which market quotations are either unavailable or are so infrequent that they do not reflect fair market value. Rev. Rul. 68-609, 1968-2 C.B. 327, points out that the general approach, methods, and factors outlined in Rev. Rul. 59-60, as modified, are equally applicable to valuations of corporate stocks for income and other tax purposes as well as for estate and gift tax purposes and apply in determining the fair market value of business interests.

Although Rev. Rul. 59-60 does not provide specific rules for stapled stock, it does provide general guidelines for valuing such stock of the distributed corporation. There are factors surrounding the formation of the distributed corporation, the distribution of its shares, its continued operation, and the sale of its stock that are not encountered in valuing the stock of a typical closely held corporation. A proper analysis of fair market value of stapled stock requires the consideration of all relevant facts and circumstances.

SEC. 4. VALUATION CONSIDERATIONS

The following factors, in addition to those mentioned in Rev. Rul. 59-60, should be considered in valuing stapled stock.

.01 Valuation of securities is, in essence, a prophecy as to the future and must be based on facts available and the prospective economic conditions as of the valuation date. Because the future of the distributed and distributing corporation will be closely associated by the stapling of the stock of the two corporations, the history and experience of the distributing corporation in conducting the same or similar business of the distributed corporation should be considered.

.02 In reviewing the prior earnings of the distributed company in operating the business either as a division or a subsidiary, adjustments must be made to the earnings to account for changes that will result because of the change in status. The distributed company may not be subject to United States laws in general and may no longer be subject to federal income taxes.

.03 When the subsidiary is a foreign corporation, consideration should be given to the corporation laws of the host country, the political stability of the host country and the countries in which the company operates, the possibility of changes in the rate of exchange, and restrictions on the transfer of funds. Consideration should also be given to the fact that the management of the distributing company weighed these factors along with other advantages and disadvantages in arriving at the decision to conduct business under this form of organization.

.04 The quality, experience, and reputation of the company are important factors in the valuation of a business. Where the distributed company proposes to carry on a business on much the same basis as had existed prior to the distribution, consideration should be given to the good will and going concern value developed by the distributing company and also whether the management of the distributed company will be composed of largely the same persons as had existed prior to the realignment. Consideration should also be given to the possibility of the distributed company being able to call upon personnel of the distributing company for specialized areas of expertise.

.05 Any financial assistance in the form of direct loans, surety arrangements, or performance guarantees from the distributing company would tend to place the distributed company in a more favorable position than if it were to exist as an operationally independent entity.

.06 Whether the distributed company is to assume any existing contracts or is to be assigned contracts from any particular customers or in any particular geographical area should be noted.

.07 If the distributed company meets stock exchange listing requirements only by virtue of the stapling arrangement, this enhanced marketability is a valuation factor to be considered.

.08 In most instances, the best measure of the value of closely held stock is found in the prices at which the stock of companies engaged in the same or a similar line of business are selling in a free and open exchange. When stock is valued by this approach it is generally necessary to adjust the preliminary value in recognition that the shares of the comparative companies are publicly traded while the shares to be valued are not.

Where the stock of the distributing corporation is registered prior to the distribution, the stapled shares can be publicly traded after the distribution with the stock of the distributing corporation. Therefore, no discount for lack of marketability is appropriate in that instance.

Section 501.—Exemption from Tax on Corporations, Certain Trusts, Etc.

26 CFR 1.501(c)(3)-1: Organizations organized and operated for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals.

Promoting sports for children. An otherwise qualifying organization that is formed to develop, promote, and regulate a sport for individuals under 18 years of age by organizing local and statewide competitions, promulgating rules, organizing officials, presenting seminars, distributing a newsletter, and otherwise encouraging growth of the sport qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code; Rev. Rul. 70-4 distinguished.

Rev. Rul. 80-215

ISSUE

Does a nonprofit organization that develops, promotes, and governs a sport for individuals under 18 years of age in a particular state, under the circumstances described below, qualify for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization, which otherwise qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, was formed to develop, promote, and regulate a sport for junior players, and to promote sportsmanlike competition for junior players in a particular state. The organization is comprised of affiliated individual associations, clubs, leagues, and teams. Each club may be comprised of any number of teams. Each team, represented by one coach, votes to elect one person from its club to be a member of the organization for two years.

The organization organizes local and state-wide competition for individuals under 18 years of age; promulgates rules; organizes officials; and presents seminars for players, coaches, and referees. The organization provides a framework for protests, appeals, and procedures. It also distributes a newsletter, and otherwise encourages the growth of the sport throughout the state.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the term "charitable" is used in section 501(c)(3) of the Code in its generally accepted legal sense and includes the advancement of education and the promotion of social welfare by organizations designed to combat juvenile delinquency.

Trusts created for the purpose of promoting sports for children have been upheld as charitable on the basis of either combatting juvenile delinquency or advancing education. Restatement (Second) Trusts (1959), section 374(n); IV Scott on Trusts (3d ed. 1967), section 374-6A; Bogert, Trusts and Trustees (2d ed. 1964), section 379.

By developing, promoting, and regulating a sport for individuals under 18 years of age, under the circumstances described above, the organization combats juvenile delinquency by providing a recreational outlet for the young people. See Rev. Rul. 65-2, 1965-1 C.B. 227, which provides, in part, that an organization that is organized and operated for the purpose of teaching a particular sport to children by holding clinics conducted by qualified instructors and by providing free instruction, equipment, and facilities is combatting juvenile delinquency within the meaning of section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

Additionally, the organization promotes the education of the children by providing a format for educational activities. Thus, its activities are charitable in its generally accepted legal sense.

Rev. Rul. 70-4, 1970-1 C.B. 126, which holds that an organization engaged in promoting and regulating a sport for amateurs is not exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, but is exempt under section 501(c)(4), is distinguishable because that organization directed its activities to all members of the general public without regard to age. The subject organization limits its activities to individuals under 18 years of age.

HOLDING

An organization that develops, promotes, and governs a sport for individuals under 18 years of age, under the circumstances described above, qualifies for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See sections 1.501(a)-1 and 1.508-1(a) of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1023, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 70-4 is distinguished.

Section 1237.—Real Property Subdivided for Sale

26 CFR 1.1237-1: Real property subdivided for sale.

Condominium conversions; capital gain v. ordinary income. Section 1237 of the Code does not apply to the conversion of rental units in an apartment building into condominiums and the sale of condominiums to the general public.

Rev. Rul. 80-216

ISSUE

Do the provisions of section 1237 of the Internal Revenue Code apply to the conversion of rental units in an apartment building into condominiums and the proposed sale of such units?

FACTS

In 1974, an individual taxpayer purchased land and a multi-unit apartment building situated on the land from an unrelated party. The apartments were rented and managed by the taxpayer until 1980, when they were converted to condominiums under applicable state law. No substantial improvements have been made to the land or the building. The taxpayer proposes to sell the condominium units to the general public.

The purchaser of a condominium unit will receive legal title in fee simple to a one-family unit in the multi-unit building coupled with ownership of an undivided interest in the land and all other parts of the building held in common with the other owners of the individual units.

The taxpayer has not previously held the apartment building for sale and does not currently hold any other real property for sale.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1237(a) of the Code provides that any lot or parcel that is part of a tract of real property in the hands of a taxpayer other than a corporation shall not be deemed to be held primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of trade or business at the time of sale solely because of the taxpayer having subdivided such tract for purposes of sale or because of any activity incident to such subdivision or sale if (1) such tract, or any lot or parcel thereof, had not previously been held by such taxpayer primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of trade or business and, in the same taxable year in which the sale occurs, such taxpayer does not so hold any other real property, (2) no substantial improvement that substantially enhances the value of the lot or parcel sold is made by the taxpayer on such tract while held by the taxpayer or is made pursuant to a contract of sale entered into between the taxpayer and the buyer, and (3) such lot or parcel, except in the case of real property acquired by inheritance or devise, is held by the taxpayer for a period of five years.

Section 1237(c) of the Code provides that the term "tract of real property" means a single piece of real property, except that two or more pieces of real property shall be considered a tract if at any time they were contiguous in the hands of the taxpayer or if they would be contiguous except for the interposition of a road, street, railroad, stream, or similar property.

The terms lot or parcel that is part of a tract of real property contained in section 1237(a) of the Code refer only to land. Although section 1237 does permit certain improvements to a tract of real property without denying the application of its provisions to the subdivision and sale of lots and parcels from such tract, the provisions of section 1237 do not apply to the subdivision and sale of improvements. See H.R. Rep. No. 1337, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. A285 (1954).

HOLDING

The benefits of section 1237 of the Code do not apply to the conversion of the rental units in the apartment building into condominiums and the proposed sale of such condominium units to the general public.

Windfall profit tax; severance tax adjustment. A state privilege tax imposed on the removal of oil, when taken together with the related income tax credit or refund, that is not determined on the basis of the gross value of the extracted oil but is determined by reference to the windfall profit portion of such value does not meet the requirements for the severance tax adjustment that may be taken into account in determining the windfall profit.

Rev. Rul. 80-217

ISSUE

Whether a state tax imposed on the removal of oil, and a related income tax credit, when taken together, constitute a severance tax for purposes of the crude oil windfall profit tax adjustment allowed by section 4988(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code.

FACTS

State X imposes a privilege tax on the removal of oil from the ground at the rate of 15 percent of the gross value of the oil at the wellhead. In addition the state's imposing statute provides the taxpayer with a state income tax credit in an amount equal to the total amount of the privilege tax imposed less the difference between (1) the federal windfall profit tax computed with a state severance tax adjustment (were the state tax in question to qualify for the severance tax adjustment), and (2) the federal windfall profit tax computed without the same state severance tax adjustment. Under the state statute, if the amount of such tax credit exceeds the taxpayer's state income tax liability for the taxable year, the excess amount is refundable to the taxpayer.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4986 of the Code imposes a tax on the windfall profit from taxable crude oil removed from the premises during each taxable period. The tax is to be paid by the producer of the crude oil.

Under section 4988 of the Code the term "windfall profit" means the excess of the removal price of the barrel of crude oil over the sum of (1) the adjusted base price of such barrel, and (2) the amount of the severance tax adjustment with respect to such barrel provided by section 4996(c).

Section 4996(c) of the Code provides that the severance tax adjustment with respect to any barrel of crude oil shall be the amount by which (A) any severance tax imposed with respect to such barrel, exceeds (B) the severance tax that would have been imposed if the barrel had been valued at its adjusted base price. For purposes of the severance tax adjustment, the term "severance tax" is defined as a tax (A) imposed by a state with respect to the extraction of oil, and (B) determined on the basis of the gross value of the extracted oil. Under section 4996(c)(3), a severance tax is not taken into account to the extent that the rate thereof exceeds 15 percent.

Section 150.4996-2(b) of the Temporary Excise Tax Regulations Under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 provides that the term "severance tax" does not include a tax levied on the value of reserves in the ground or a tax levied on the basis of net proceeds from production. That section further provides that a tax on the removal of crude oil from the ground levied at a fixed fee per barrel is not a severance tax because the amount of that tax is not determined by reference to the gross value of the extracted oil.

In this case, although the privilege tax imposed by state X is ostensibly on the gross value of the oil, only a portion of the amount of tax paid by the taxpayer is retained by the state. The following example illustrates the above:

A, located in state X, extracts oil from the ground that has a removal value of $40.00 per barrel. The adjusted base price of the oil is $16.00 per barrel. The oil is of the type that is subject to the federal windfall profit tax at the 50 percent rate. The computations are as follows:

State X Privilege Tax Imposed ($40.00 × 15 percent)		$ 6.00
Less: Privilege Tax on Adjusted Base Price ($16.00 × 15 percent)		$ 2.40
Severance Tax Adjustment (if allowed)		$ 3.60
Federal Windfall Profit Tax (WPT) Computation:
Removal value of oil		$40.00
Less: Adjusted base price		$16.00
Windfall profit before severance tax adjustment		$24.00
Less: Severance Tax Adjustment		3.60
Windfall profit with severance tax adjustment		$20.40
WPT with severance tax adjustment ($20.40 × 50 percent)		$10.20
WPT without severance tax adjustment ($24.00 × 50 percent)		$12.00
State X Income Tax Credit:
Privilege Tax Paid by A		$ 6.00
WPT without severance tax adjustment	$12.00
WPT with severance tax adjustment	$10.20
Difference		$ 1.80
Amount of privilege tax refunded to A		$ 4.20
Amount of privilege tax retained by state X		$ 1.80

The example indicates that although the state X tax (15 percent) is ostensibly determined on the basis of the gross value of the oil, and A initially pays $6.00 tax to the state, A receives a credit or refund of $4.20 from the state resulting in a net tax paid of $1.80. This net tax ($1.80) equals the rate of state X's tax (15 percent) multiplied by the amount of A's federal windfall profit tax liability computed without a severance tax adjustment ($12.00).

Thus, the state privilege tax, when taken together with the related income tax credit or refund, is not determined on the basis of the gross value of the extracted oil but is determined by reference to the windfall profit portion of such value.

HOLDING

The privilege tax imposed by state X does not meet the requirements for the severance tax adjustment and thus may not be taken into account in determining the windfall profit for purposes of computing the crude oil windfall profit tax imposed by section 4986 of the Code.

Section 7502.—Timely Mailing Treated as Timely Filing and Paying

Rev. Rul. 80-218

United States federal tax returns mailed by taxpayers in foreign countries will be accepted as timely filed if they bear an official postmark dated on or before midnight of the last date prescribed for filing, including any extension of time for such filing. If the last date for filing falls on a Saturday or Sunday, returns will be considered timely if postmarked on or before midnight of the following Monday.

Part III. Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous

Ct. D. 2001

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES
NO. 78-1729

United States v. Payner
[447 U.S.]

On writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit

Syllabus

At respondent's nonjury trial for falsifying a federal income tax return by denying that he maintained a foreign bank account, respondent moved to suppress a loan guarantee agreement in which he pledged the funds in the bank account as security. The District Court found respondent guilty on the basis of all the evidence, but then (1) found that the Government had discovered the guarantee agreement as the result of a flagrantly illegal search of a bank officer's briefcase, (2) suppressed all the Goverment's evidence except for respondent's tax return and related testimony, and (3) set aside the conviction for failure to demonstrate knowing falsification. The court held, inter alia, that, although the illegal search did not violate respondent's Fourth Amendment rights, the inherent supervisory power of the federal courts required it to exclude evidence tainted by the illegal search. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held:

1. Respondent lacks standing under the Fourth Amendment to suppress the documents illegally seized from the bank officer. A defendant's Fourth Amendment rights are violated only when the challenged conduct invaded his legitimate expectation of privacy rather than that of a third party, and respondent possessed no privacy interest in the documents seized in this case. Cf. Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128; United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435 [Ct. D. 1978, 1976-1 C.B. 535].

2. The supervisory power of the federal courts does not authorize a court to suppress otherwise admissible evidence on the ground that it was seized unlawfully from a third party not before the court. Under the Fourth Amendment, the interest in deterring illegal searches does not justify the exclusion of tainted evidence at the instance of a party who was not the victim of the challenged practices. And the values assigned to the competing interests of deterring illegal searches and of furnishing the trier of fact with all relevant evidence do not change because a court has elected to analyze the question under the supervisory power instead of the Fourth Amendment. Such power does not extend so far as to confer on the judiciary discretionary power to disregard the considered limitations of the law it is charged with enforcing.

590 F. 2d 206, reversed.

Powell, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Burger, C. J., and Stewart, White, Rehnquist, and Stevens, JJ., joined. Burger, C. J., filed a concurring opinion. Marshall, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which Brennan and Blackmun, JJ., joined.

Mr. Justice Powell delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question is whether the District Court properly suppressed the fruits of an unlawful search that did not invade the respondent's Fourth Amendment rights.

I

Respondent Jack Payner was indicted in September 1976 on a charge of falsifying his 1972 federal income tax return in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001.[1] The indictment alleged that respondent denied maintaining a foreign bank account at a time when he knew that he had such an account at the Castle Bank and Trust Company of Nassau, Bahama Islands. The Government's case rested heavily on a loan guarantee agreement dated April 28, 1972, in which respondent pledged the funds in his Castle Bank account as security for a $100,000 loan.

Respondent waived his right to jury trial and moved to suppress the guarantee agreement. With the consent of the parties, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio took evidence on the motion at a hearing consolidated with the trial on the merits. The court found respondent guilty as charged on the basis of all the evidence. The court also found, however, that the Government discovered the guarantee agreement by exploiting a flagrantly illegal search that occurred on January 15, 1973. The court therefore suppressed "all evidence introduced in the case by the Government with the exception of Jack Payner's 1972 tax return . . . and the related testimony." United States v. Payner, 434 F. Supp. 113, 136 (1977). As the tax return alone was insufficient to demonstrate knowing falsification, the District Court set aside respondent's conviction.[2]

The events leading up to the 1973 search are not in dispute. In 1965, the Internal Revenue Service launched an investigation into the financial activities of American citizens in the Bahamas. The project, known as "Operation Trade Winds," was headquartered in Jacksonville, Fla. Suspicion focused on the Castle Bank in 1972, when investigators learned that a suspected narcotics trafficker had an account there. Special Agent Richard Jaffe of the Jacksonville office asked Norman Casper, a private investigator and occasional informant, to learn what he could about the Castle Bank and its depositors. To that end, Casper cultivated his friendship with Castle Bank vice-president Michael Wolstencroft. Casper introduced Wolstencroft to Sybol Kennedy, a private investigator and former employee. When Casper discovered that the banker intended to spend a few days in Miami in January of 1973, he devised a scheme to gain access to the bank records he knew Wolstencroft would be carrying in his briefcase. Agent Jaffe approved the basic outline of the plan.

Wolstencroft arrived in Miami on January 15 and went directly to Kennedy's apartment. At about 7:30 p.m., the two left for dinner at a Key Biscayne restaurant. Shortly thereafter, Casper entered the apartment using a key supplied by Kennedy. He removed the briefcase and delivered it to Jaffe. While the agent supervised the copying of approximately 400 documents taken from the briefcase, a "lookout" observed Kennedy and Wolstencroft at dinner. The observer notified Casper when the pair left the restaurant, and the briefcase was replaced. The documents photographed that evening included papers evidencing a close working relationship between the Castle Bank and the Bank of Perrine, Fla. Subpoenas issued to the Bank of Perrine ultimately uncovered the loan guarantee agreement at issue in this case.

"Whoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the United States knowingly and willfully . . . makes any false, fictitious or fraudulent statements or representations, . . . shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

[2] The unusual sequence of rulings was a byproduct of the consolidated hearing conducted by the District Court. The court initially failed to enter judgment on the merits. At the close of the evidence, it simply granted respondent's motion to suppress. After the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit dismissed the government's appeal for want of jurisdiction, the District Court vacated the order granting the motion to suppress and entered a verdict of guilty. The court then reinstated its suppression order and set aside the verdict. Respondent does not challenge these procedures.

The District Court found that the United States, acting through Jaffe, "knowingly and willfully participated in the unlawful seizure of Michael Wolstencroft's briefcase. . . ." 434 F. Supp, at 120. According to that court, "the Government affirmatively counsels its agents that the Fourth Amendment standing limitation permits them to purposefully conduct an unconstitutional search and seizure of one individual in order to obtain evidence against third parties. . . ." Id., at 132-133. The District Court also found that the documents seized from Wolstencroft provided the leads that ultimately led to the discovery of the critical loan guarantee agreement. Id., at 123.[3] Although the search did not impinge upon the respondent's Fourth Amendment rights, the District Court believed that the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment and the inherent supervisory power of the federal courts required it to exclude evidence tainted by the Government's "knowing and purposeful bad faith hostility to any person's fundamental constitutional rights." Id., at 129; see id., at 133, 134-135.

The Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit affirmed in a brief order endorsing the District Court's use of its supervisory power. United States v. Payner, 590 F. 2d 206 (1979) (per curiam). The Court of Appeals did not decide the due process question. We granted certiorari—U.S.—(1979), and we now reverse.

II

This Court discussed the doctrine of "standing to invoke the [Fourth Amendment] exclusionary rule" in some detail last term. Rakas v. Illinois, 439 U.S. 128, 138 (1978). We reaffirmed the established rule that a court may not exclude evidence under the Fourth Amendment unless it finds that an unlawful search or seizure violated the defendant's own constitutional rights. Id., at 133-140. See, e.g., Brown v. United States, 411 U.S. 223, 229-230 (1973); Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165, 171-172 (1969); Simmons v. United States, 390 U.S. 377, 389 (1968). And the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights are violated only when the challenged conduct invaded his legitimate expectation of privacy rather than that of a third party. Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 143; id., at 149-152 (POWELL, J., concurring); Combs v. United States, 408 U.S. 224, 227 (1972); Mancusi v. DeForte, 392 U.S. 364, 368 (1968).

The foregoing authorities establish, as the District Court recognized, that respondent lacks standing under the Fourth Amendment to suppress the documents illegally seized from Wolstencroft. 434 F. Supp., at 126. The Court of Appeals did not disturb the District Court's conclusion that "Jack Payner possessed no privacy interest in the Castle Bank documents that were seized from Wolstencroft." 434 F. Supp., at 126; see 590 F. 2d, at 207. Nor do we. United States v. Miller, 425 U.S. 435 (1976), established that a depositor has no expectation of privacy and thus no "protectable Fourth Amendment interest" in copies of checks and deposit slips retained by his bank. Id., at 437; see id., at 442. Nothing in the record supports a contrary conclusion in this case.[4]

The District Court and the Court of Appeals believed, however, that a federal court should use its supervisory power to suppress evidence tainted by gross illegalities that did not infringe the defendant's constitutional rights. The United States contends that this approach—as applied in this case—upsets the careful balance of interests embodied in the Fourth Amendment decisions of this Court. In the Government's view, such an extension of the supervisory power would enable federal courts to exercise a standardless discretion in their application of the exclusionary rule to enforce the Fourth Amendment. We agree with the Government.

We certainly can understand the District Court's commendable desire to deter deliberate intrusions into the privacy of persons who are unlikely to become defendants in a criminal prosecution. See 434 F. Supp., at 135. No court should condone the unconstitutional and possibly criminal behavior of those who planned and executed this "briefcase caper."[5] Indeed, the decisions of this Court are replete with denunciations of willfully lawless activities undertaken in the name of law enforcement. E.g., Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368, 386 (1964); see Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 485 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting). But our cases also show that these unexceptional principles do not command the exclusion of evidence in every case of illegality. Instead, they must be weighed against the considerable harm that would flow from indiscriminate application of an exclusionary rule.

[3] The United States argued in the District Court and the Court of Appeals that the guarantee agreement was discovered through an independent investigation untainted by the briefcase search. The Government also denied that its agents willfully encouraged Casper's illegal behavior. For purposes of this opinion, we need not question the District Court's contrary findings on either point.

[4] We are not persuaded by respondent's suggestion that the Bahamian law of bank secrecy creates an expectation of privacy not present in United States v. Miller, 425 U. S. 435 (1976). At the outset, it is not clear that secret information regarding this respondent's account played any role in the investigation that led to the discovery of the critical loan guarantee agreement. Even if the causal link were established, however, respondent's claim lacks merit. He cites a provision, Ch. 96.9 of the Statute Law of the Bahama Islands (1909), that is no longer in effect. Bank secrecy is now safeguarded by § 19 of the Banks Act, I Bah. Rev. Stat. ch. 96 (1965), as amended, 1965 Bah. Acts No. 65, which provides in relevant part:

> "Except for the purpose of the performance of his duties or the exercise of his functions under this Act or when lawfully required to do so by any court of competent jurisdiction within the Colony or under the provisions of any law of the Colony, no person shall disclose any information relating to . . . the affairs of . . . any customer of a [bank] licensee which he has acquired in the performance of his duties or the exercise of his functions under this Act."

See also the Banks and Trust Companies Regulation Act, 1965 Bah. Acts No. 64, § 10, as amended, 1968 Bah. Acts No. 33, 1969 Bah. Acts No. 20, 1971 Bah. Acts No. 15. The statute is hardly a blanket guarantee of privacy. Its application is limited; it is hedged with exceptions; and we have been directed to no authority construing its terms. Moreover, American depositors know that their own country requires them to report relationships with foreign financial institutions. 31 U. S. C. § 1121; 31 CFR § 103.24. See generally California Bankers Assn. v. Shultz, 416 U. S. 21, 59-63, 71-76 (1974) [Ct. D. 1960, 1974-1 C.B. 393]. We conclude that respondent lacked a reasonable expectation of privacy in the Castle Bank records that documented his account.

Thus, the exclusionary rule "has been restricted to those areas where its remedial objectives are most efficaciously served." United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 348 (1974). The Court has acknowledged that the suppression of probative but tainted evidence exacts a costly toll upon the ability of courts to ascertain the truth in a criminal case. E.g., Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 137-138; United States v. Ceccolini, 435 U.S. 268, 275-279 (1978); Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. 464, 489-491 (1976); see Michigan v. Tucker, 417 U.S. 433, 450-451 (1974).[6] Our cases have consistently recognized that unbending application of the exclusionary sanction to enforce ideals of governmental rectitude would impede unacceptably the truth-finding functions of judge and jury. E.g., Stone v. Powell, supra, at 485-489; United States v. Calandra, supra, at 348. After all, it is the defendant, and not the constable, who stands trial.

The same societal interests are at risk when a criminal defendant invokes the supervisory power to suppress evidence seized in violation of a third party's constitutional rights. The supervisory power is applied with some caution even when the defendant asserts a violation of his own rights.[7] In United States v. Caceres, 440 U.S. 741, 754-757 (1979) [Ct. D. 1998, 1979-1 C.B. 465], we refused to exclude all evidence tainted by violations of an executive department's rules. And in Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 216 (1960), the Court called for a restrained application of the supervisory power.

> "[A]ny apparent limitation upon the process of discovering truth in a federal trial ought to be imposed only upon the basis of considerations which outweigh the general need for untrammeled disclosure of competent and relevant evidence in a court of justice." 364 U.S., at 216.

See also Nardone v. United States, 308 U.S. 338, 340 (1939).

We conclude that the supervisory power does not authorize a federal court to suppress otherwise admissible evidence on the ground that it was seized unlawfully from a third party not before the court. Our Fourth Amendment decisions have established beyond any doubt that the interest in deterring illegal searches does not justify the exclusion of tainted evidence at the instance of a party who was not the victim of the challenged practices. Rakas v. Illinois, supra, at 137; Alderman v. United States, supra, at 174-175.[8] The values assigned to the competing interests do not change because a court has elected to analyze the question under the supervisory power instead of the [5] "The security of persons and property remains a fundamental value which law enforcement officers must respect. Nor should those who flout the rules escape unscathed." Alderman v. United States, 394 U. S. 165, 175 (1969). We note that in 1976 Congress investigated the improprieties revealed in this record. See Oversight Hearings into the Operations of the IRS before a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Government Operations (Operation Tradewinds, Project Haven, and Narcotics Traffickers Tax Program), 94th Cong., 1st Sess. As a result, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue "called off" Operation Trade Winds. Tr. of Oral Arg. 35. The Commissioner also adopted guidelines that require agents to instruct informants on the requirements of the law and to report known illegalities to a supervisory officer, who is in turn directed to notify appropriate state authorities. IRS Manual Supp. 9-21, §§ 9373.3(3), 9373.4 (Dec. 27, 1977). Although these measures appear on their face to be less positive than one might expect from an agency charged with upholding the law, they do indicate disapproval of the practices found to have been implemented in this case. We cannot assume that similar lawless conduct, if brought to the attention of responsible officials, would not be dealt with appropriately. To require in addition the suppression of highly probative evidence in a trial against a third party would penalize society unnecessarily.

[6] See also Kaufman v. United States, 394 U. S. 217, 237-238 (1969) (Black, J., dissenting); Oaks, Studying the Exclusionary Rule in Search and Seizure, 37 U. Chi. L. Rev. 665, 736-746, 755-756 (1970).

[8] "The deterrent values of preventing the incrimination of those whose rights the police have violated have been considered sufficient to justify the suppression of probative evidence even though the case against the defendant is weakened or destroyed. We adhere to that judgment. But we are not convinced that the additional benefits of extending the exclusionary rule to other defendants would justify further encroachment upon the public interest in prosecuting those accused of crime and having them acquitted or convicted on the basis of all the evidence which exposes the truth." Alderman v. United States, supra, at 174-175. See also Stone v. Powell, 428 U. S. 464, 488-489 (1976); United States v. Calandra, 414 U. S. 338, 348 (1974).

The dissent urges that the balance of interests under the supervisory power differs from that considered in Alderman and like cases, because the supervisory power focuses upon the "need to protect the integrity of the federal courts." Although the District Court in this case relied upon a deterrent rationale, we agree that the supervisory power serves the "two-fold" purpose of deterring illegality and protecting judicial integrity. As the dissent recognizes, however, the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule serves precisely the same purposes. Ibid., citing, inter alia, Dunaway v. New York, 442 U. S. 200, 218 (1979), and Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U. S. 643, 659-660 (1961). Thus, the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule, like the supervisory power, is applied in part "to protect the integrity of the court rather than to vindicate the constitutional rights of the defendant. . . ."; see generally Stone v. Powell, 428 U. S. 465, 486 (1976); United States v. Calandra, supra, at 486.

In this case, where the illegal conduct did not violate the respondent's rights, the interest in preserving judicial integrity and in deterring such conduct is outweighed by the societal interest in presenting probative evidence to the trier of fact. See supra; see also, e.g., Stone v. Powell, supra, at 485-486. None of the cases cited by the dissent supports a contrary view, since none of those cases involved criminal defendants who were not themselves the victims of the challenged practices. Thus, our decision today does not limit the traditional scope of the supervisory power in any way; nor des it render that power "superfluous." We merely reject its use as a substitute for established Fourth Amendment doctrine.

Fourth Amendment. In either case, the need to deter the underlying conduct and the detrimental impact of excluding the evidence remain precisely the same.

The District Court erred, therefore, when it concluded that "society's interest in deterring [bad faith] conduct by exclusion outweigh[s] society's interest in furnishing the trier of fact with all relevant evidence." 434 F. Supp., at 135. This reasoning, which the Court of Appeals affirmed, amounts to a substitution of individual judgment for the controlling decisions of this Court.[9] Were we to accept this use of the supervisory power, we would confer on the judiciary discretionary power to disregard the considered limitations of the law it is charged with enforcing. We hold that the supervisory power does not extend so far.

[9] The same difficulty attends respondent's claim to the protections of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. The Court of Appeals expressly declined to consider the Due Process Clause. But even if we assume that the unlawful briefcase search was so outrageous as to offend fundamental " 'canons of decency and fairness,' " Rochin v. California, 342 U. S. 165, 169 (1952), quoting Malinski v. New York, 324 U. S. 401, 417 (1945) (opinion of Frankfurter, J.), the fact remains that "[t]he limitations of the Due Process Clause . . . come into play only when the Government activity in question violates some protected right of the defendant," Hampton v. United States, supra, at 490 (plurality opinion).

The following organization, which has been treated as a private operating foundation described in section 4942 (j)(3) of the Code, has now been classified as an organization that is not a private operating foundation. Grantors and contributors may no longer rely upon rulings or determinations that this organization is a private operating foundation. The organization is:

Son Life Ministries, Inc., Winter Haven, FL

If an organization listed above submits information that warrants the renewal of its classification as a public charity or as a private operating foundation, the Internal Revenue Service will issue a ruling or determination letter with the revised classification as to foundation status. Grantors and contributors may thereafter rely upon such ruling or determination letter as provided in section 1.509(a)-7 of the Income Tax Regulations. It is not the practice of the Service to announce such revised classification of foundation status in the Internal Revenue Bulletin.

This announcement will appear in the weekly Bulletin at the earliest practicable date after such action and will continue to appear in the weekly Bulletins for five successive weeks or for as many weeks as is practicable for each attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary so suspended and will later be consolidated and published in the Cumulative Bulletin.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

INCOME TAX

Rev. Rul. 80-219, page 5.
Recapture of investment credit; sale of undivided interest in facility to tax exempt cooperative. The investment credit recapture implications of the sale by a public utility company of an undivided interest in its electric generating facility to a tax exempt cooperative are discussed.

Rev. Rul. 80-220, page 6.
Employees' group-term life insurance; coverage brackets. Life insurance covering fewer than ten full-time employees that would meet the qualifications of section 1.79-1(c) of the regulations only if all three of its coverage brackets were taken into account is not group-term life insurance for purposes of section 79 of the Code if no employee has ever been covered under the middle bracket.

Rev. Rul. 80-221, page 6.
Redemption of stock; appreciated property; plan of sale. A corporation issued preferred stock for cash with the intent of later redeeming the stock for appreciated property. The transaction was merely a prearranged plan to avoid the tax on the sale of the property, and the nonrecognition of gain provisions of section 311(a) of the Code did not apply.

Rev. Rul. 80-222, page 10.
Foreign insurance company; no U.S. agent; reinsurance of U.S. risks. A foreign insurance company, which is not engaged in the conduct of trade or business in the U.S., reinsures risks that were initially assumed by other insurance companies and that are located in the U.S. The policies are neither signed nor countersigned in the U.S. by any officer or agent of the foreign insurance company. The premiums paid on such policies are subject to the excise tax imposed by section 4371(3) of the Code. The premiums received are not subject to either taxation under section 881 or withholding under section 1442. I.T. 1359 and I.T. 3061 amplified and superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-223, page 12.
Foreign tax credit; inconsistent provisions of treaties. The enactment of sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code by the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 supersedes inconsistent provisions of all income tax treaties.

Rev. Proc. 80-33, page 21.

Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 38.—Investment in Certain Depreciable Property

26 CFR 1.38-1: Investment in certain depreciable property.

Whether the sale of an undivided interest in its "section 38 property" by a utility company to a tax exempt cooperative disqualifies the utility company's retained interest as section 38 property. See Rev. Rul. 80-219, below.

Section 47.—Certain Dispositions, Etc., of Section 38 Property

26 CFR 1.47-2: "Disposition" and "cessation."
(Also Sections 38, 761; 1.38-1, 1.761-2.)

Recapture of investment credit; sale of undivided interest in facility to tax exempt cooperative. The investment credit recapture implications of the sale by a public utility company of an undivided interest in its electric generating facility to a tax exempt cooperative are discussed.

Rev. Rul. 80-219

ISSUES

(1) When a utility company sells an undivided interest in its "section 38 property" to a tax exempt cooperative, creating a partnership for federal tax purposes, does ownership of the undivided interest by the cooperative disqualify the utility company's retained interest in the property as section 38 property, thereby causing the recapture provisions of section 47(a) of the Internal Revenue Code to apply? Also, does the contribution by the utility company of its retained interest to the partnership constitute a disposition of section 38 property for purposes of section 47(a)?

(2) Will the federal income tax treatment be different if the partners elect under section 761 of the Code to be excluded from the application of subchapter K, chapter 1, of the Code?

Situation 1.

M is an investor-owned electric utility company. M owned the entire interest in and operates facilities for the generation, transmission, and distribution of electricity. All of the facilities were acquired by M for use in its business and qualified as section 38 property. In 1978 M sold an undivided interest in certain generating facilities to T, a cooperative exempt from federal income tax pursuant to the provisions of section 501(c)(12) of the Code. The facilities are owned by M and T as a tenancy in common under a joint operating agreement classified as a partnership and each is considered to have contributed its interest in the facilities to the partnership for federal income tax purposes. The M and T partnership is subject to the provisions of subchapter K, chapter 1, of the Code.

Situation 2.

The facts are the same as Situation 1 except that the partners elected pursuant to the provisions of section 1.761-2(b) of the Income Tax Regulations to be excluded from the application of subchapter K, chapter 1, of the Code. Thus, M and T were excluded from partnership status.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 38 of the Code allows an investment credit with respect to qualified investment in certain depreciable property.

Section 47(a)(1) of the Code provides that if during the taxable year any property is disposed of, or otherwise ceases to be section 38 property with respect to the taxpayer, before the close of the useful life that was taken into account in computing the credit under section 38, then the tax under chapter 1 of the Code for such taxable year shall be increased by an amount equal to the aggregate decrease in the credits allowed under section 38 for all prior taxable years that would have resulted solely from substituting, in determining qualified investment, for such useful life the period beginning with the time such property was placed in service by the taxpayer and ending with the time such property ceased to be section 38 property.

Section 47(b) of the Code provides that property shall not be treated as ceasing to be section 38 property with respect to the taxpayer by reason of a mere change in the form of conducting the trade or business so long as the property is retained in such trade or business as section 38 property and the taxpayer retains a substantial interest in such trade or business.

Section 1.47-3(f) of the regulations provides that no disposition of section 38 property will occur by reason of a mere change in form of conducting a trade or business if the following conditions are met. The conditions are: (1) the property is retained as section 38 property in the same trade or business, (2) the transferor retains a substantial interest in such trade or business, (3) substantially all the assets necessary to operate such trade or business are transferred, and (4) the basis of the property to the transferee is determined by reference to the basis in the hands of the transferor.

Section 721 of the Code provides that no gain or loss shall be recognized to a partnership or to any of its partners in the case of a contribution of property to the partnership in exchange for an interest in the partnership.

Section 723 of the Code provides that the basis of property contributed to a partnership by a partner shall be the adjusted basis of such property to the contributing partner at the time of the contribution increased by the amount (if any) of gain recognized to the contributing partner at such time.

Rev. Rul. 78-268, 1978-2 C.B. 10, holds that when an electric generating facility is owned as a tenancy in common under an arrangement classified as a partnership, the disallowance of the investment credit in respect of the interest of the cooperative and the city (two of the four partners) does not render the investment in the facilities by investor-owned utilities (the other two partners) ineligible for the investment credit.

HOLDING

Situation 1.

The sale by M of an undivided interest in its generating facilities to T will be treated as a disposition of property within the meaning of section 47(a) of the Code. Thus, there is a recapture of the investment credit taken on such property. The interest retained by M is not disqualified as section 38 property; thus, there is no disposition of property under section 47(a) that would result in a recapture of investment credit with respect to the interest retained by M.

The contribution of M's retained interest in the facilities to the partnership is not a disposition of property within the meaning of section 47(a) because the conditions specified in section 1.47-3(f) of the regulations have been met.

Situation 2.

The election by M and T to be excluded from the provisions of subchapter K, chapter 1, of the Code does not alter the tax treatment set forth in Situation 1 above.

Section 79.—Group-Term Life Insurance Purchased for Employees

26 CFR 1.79-1: Group-term life insurance —general rules.

Employees' group-term life insurance; coverage brackets. Life insurance covering fewer than ten full-time employees that would meet the qualifications of section 1.79-1(c) of the regulations only if all three of its coverage brackets were taken into account is not group-term life insurance for purposes of section 79 of the Code if no employee has ever been covered under the middle bracket.

Rev. Rul. 80-220

ISSUE

Does the life insurance described below qualify as group-term life insurance for purposes of section 79 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

In 1979 X corporation established a plan to provide life insurance for its four full-time employees. The amount of protection for the employees was computed on the basis of coverage brackets (established by the insurer) as follows:

Bracket	Description	Amount of Coverage
1	officer/shareholder	$50,000
2	junior professional	$25,000
3	bookkeeper/secretary	$10,000

Of the four full-time employees, three were eligible for coverage under bracket 1 and the remaining employee was covered under bracket 3. Although additional employees have been hired by X since inception of the plan, no employee has ever been covered under bracket 2.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 79(a) of the Code provides that the yearly cost of group-term life insurance provided by an employer on the life of any employee will be includible in the gross income of the employee to the extent that such cost exceeds the sum of the cost of $50,000 of such insurance and the amount (if any) paid by the employee toward the purchase of such insurance.

Section 1.79-1(c) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that, as a general rule, life insurance provided to a group of employees cannot qualify as group-term life insurance unless, at some time during the calendar year, it is provided to at least ten full-time employees who are members of the group of employees. However, the general rule does not apply if, among other conditions, the amount of insurance provided is computed either as a uniform percentage of compensation or on the basis of coverage brackets established by the insurer. In general, the amount of insurance provided employees in a coverage bracket may not exceed 2½ times the coverage of the next lower bracket and the coverage of the lowest bracket must be at least 10 percent of the coverage of the highest bracket.

In the present case, the employees of X (a group including less than ten full-time employees) are entitled to amounts of insurance computed on the basis of three coverage brackets. However, since inception of the plan, no employee of X has ever been covered under bracket 2. Thus, for all practical purposes, there are only two brackets, 1 and 3, and the coverage of bracket 1 exceeds 2½ times the coverage of bracket 3. Therefore, the requirements of section 1.79-1(c) of the regulations have not been satisfied.

HOLDING

The life insurance provided to employees of X is not group-term life insurance for purposes of section 79 of the Code and the employees of X may not exclude from gross income any portion of the cost of such insurance.

Section 167.—Depreciation

26 CFR 1.167(a)-11: Depreciation based on class life asset depreciation ranges for property placed in service after December 31, 1970.

Revision of effective dates for Rev. Proc. 79-26, 1979-1 C.B. 566, and Rev. Proc. 79-35, 1979-2 C.B. 498, both of which prescribed certain changes to Rev. Proc. 77-10, 1977-1 C.B. 548, regarding the Class Life Asset Depreciation Range system. See Rev. Proc. 80-33, page 21.

Section 311.—Taxability of Corporation on Distribution

(Also Section 1001; 1.1001-1.)

Redemption of stock; appreciated property; plan of sale. A corporation issued preferred stock for cash with the intent of later redeeming the stock for appreciated property. The transaction was merely a prearranged plan to avoid the tax on the sale of the property, and the nonrecognition of gain provisions of section 311(a) of the Code did not apply.

Rev. Rul. 80-221

ISSUE

Whether the nonrecognition of gain provisions of section 311(a) of the Internal Revenue Code apply where a corporation issues its "preferred stock" for cash for the purpose of redeeming the "stock" from the purchaser with appreciated property owned by the corporation.

FACTS

Corporation X is engaged in a manufacturing business and owned a piece of vacant land which it originally acquired for use in its manufacturing business. X abandoned its plans for the use of the land in its business. The land had an adjusted basis of 100*x* dollars and a fair market value of 10,000*x* dollars. Y, an unrelated corporation, offered to purchase the land at its fair market value of 10,000*x* dollars. However, X, in order to avoid the recognition of gain on the sale of the land, entered into the following transaction with Y. On March 31, 1979, Y purchased for 10,000*x* dollars one share of 10,000*x*-dollar-par-value nonvoting "preferred stock" of X. This share of "stock" called for payment of a quarterly cumulative dividend of 300*x* dollars. The "stock" was redeemable at the option of the shareholder 13 months after issuance solely by the transfer of legal title and possession of the land to the shareholder. However, if an event occurred that would excuse X from transferring title to Y (such as a condemnation of the land by the state), X would be required to redeem the "stock" with a payment of 10,000*x* dollars in cash. The "stock" was also callable by X under the same terms 14 months after issuance.

X was entitled to full use and possession of the land while the "stock" was outstanding, but could not waste, sell, or otherwise dispose of the land. X was liable for the real estate taxes on the property during the period the "stock" was outstanding. The real estate taxes on the land were nominal. On March 31, 1979, Y gave 10,000*x* dollars to X in exchange for this one share of X "preferred stock." The fair market value of the land on that date was 10,000*x* dollars.

On May 1, 1980, 13 months after the issuance of the "preferred stock", Y, who had received no dividends on the "preferred stock," demanded redemption of the share of "preferred stock." Y received a deed transferring legal title to the land to Y. Y also received 1,200*x* dollars in cash for the accrued quarterly dividends on the stock. The value of the "stock" during the 12-month period immediately prior to the distribution in redemption thereof represented at least 10 percent in value of all the outstanding stock of X during that period. Y had no other interest in X.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 61(a)(3) of the Code states that gross income includes gains derived from dealings in property. Section 1001(a) provides, in part, that the gain from the sale or other disposition of property shall be the excess of the amount realized therefrom over the adjusted basis provided in section 1011 for determining gain. Section 311(a) provides, in part, that except as provided in subsection (d), no gain or loss shall be recognized to a corporation on a distribution, with respect to its stock or property. Section 311(d)(1) provides that a corporation shall recognize gain if it distributes appreciated property in redemption of its stock. However, section 311(d)(2)(A) provides that the exception of section 311(d)(1) to the general rule of nonrecognition of section 311(a) will not apply if the redemption is (1) a distribution in complete redemption of all of the stock of a shareholder, who (2) for the 12-month period immediately prior to the distribution (3) holds at least 10 percent in value of the outstanding stock of the distributing corporation.

The form of the transaction in this case (a purchase of X stock by Y followed by a redemption of this stock with X distributing the vacant land to Y in full payment in exchange therefor) was chosen solely for the purpose of attempting by the application of section 311(a) of the Code, to avoid the tax on the gain that otherwise would have been recognized to X. Y had no interest in acquiring "stock" ownership in X, and Y did so only to accommodate the tax avoidance motives of X. Y's objectives were solely to purchase the land from X, and X's objectives were to sell the land to Y. Y's "stock" ownership in X was transitory and was not intended to represent a normal shareholder interest. Rather, the "stock" represented Y's right to receive the land at a specified time and to receive payment for giving X the purchase price of the land prior to Y receiving title to the land.

The two steps of the transaction of the purchase of the "stock" and its "redemption" for the land were part of a prearranged integrated plan and may not be considered independently of each other for federal income tax purposes. See Rev. Rul. 70-140, 1970-1 C.B. 73, which concluded that the transfer by an individual of assets of proprietorship, pursuant to an integrated plan, followed by the corporation's acquisition by an unrelated corporation did not qualify under the nonrecognition provisions of section 351 and that gain or loss was recognized under section 1001. Compare Idol v. Commissioner, 38 T.C. 444, aff'd, 319 F.2d 647 (6th Cir 1963), in which section 311(a) of the Code was held not to apply to a redemption of stock that had been acquired solely for the purpose of having it redeemed by the distribution of appreciated assets. In Bush Brothers and Co. v. Commissioner, 73 T.C. No. 37 (1979), the United States Tax Court stated that the nonrecognition provisions of section 311(a) of the Code were not intended to apply to transactions that are motivated primarily by tax avoidance and without any substantial business purpose.

HOLDING

Section 311(a) of the Code is not applicable to the subject transaction, and gain is recognized to X on the sale of the land to Y under section 1001.

Section 412.—Minimum Funding Standards

26 CFR 1.412(i)-1: Certain insurance contract plans.

Exception for certain insurance contract plans from minimum funding standards.

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

[1] This publication of the Treasury Decision contains the complete text of the amendments to the regulations. The instructions for modifying the notice of proposed rulemaking have been omitted.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to an exception for certain pension plans funded exclusively by insurance contracts from the minimum funding standards. Changes in the applicable tax law were made by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 [Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1]. These regulations provide necessary guidance to the public for compliance with the law and affect employees covered by those plans.

DATE: For plans in existence on January 1, 1974, the regulations are effective for plan years beginning after December 31, 1975. For plans not in existence on January 1, 1974, the regulations are effective for plan years beginning after September 2, 1974.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On February 6, 1975, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under section 412(i) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (40 F.R. 5535). The amendments were proposed in order to conform the regulations to section 1013(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (88 Stat. 914) and section 301(b) of such Act (88 Stat. 869). A public hearing was neither requested nor held on these proposed regulations. After consideration of all comments regarding the proposed amendments those amendments are adopted as revised by this Treasury decision.

INSURANCE CONTRACT PLANS

Section 412 of the Code prescribes minimum funding standards which are generally applicable to defined benefit plans. Under section 412(h)(2) of the Code, any insurance contract plan described in section 412(i) of the Code for a plan year is not subject to the minimum funding requirements of section 412 for that plan year. Section 412(i) of the Code sets forth certain specified requirements which such a plan must meet to qualify for this exception from the minimum funding requirements. Section 412(i) provides further that a plan funded exclusively by the purchase of group insurance contracts which is determined under regulations to have the same characteristics as an individual insurance contract plan will be treated as a plan described in section 412(i).

PAYMENT OF LOAD FACTORS

Section 412(i) of the Code and § 1.412(i)-1(b)(2)(i) and (c)(2)(i) of the regulations, as proposed, require that an insurance contract plan be funded exclusively by the purchase of insurance contracts. The final regulations make it clear that this requirement is not violated by payments which are made in order to satisfy certain minimum vesting requirements with respect to accrued benefits derived from employee contributions. Thus, for example, it will be permissible for an employer to pay the "load factor" on insurance contracts in order for the plan to meet the requirement (set forth in section 411 of the Code) that an employee must be 100 percent vested in the accrued benefit derived from his own contributions.

PREMIUM PAYMENTS

Section 412(i) states that the insurance contract plan must provide for level annual premium payments. The final regulations clarify this requirement. Employees who cease their participation in the plan may pay premiums on their own behalf if the contracts are distributed to them upon their termination of employment. The level annual payment applies only to the premiums on the insurance contracts. Consequently, it is permissible for the insurance company to apply such items as experience gains and dividends against premiums due on the contracts without violating this requirement.

LAPSES AND LOANS

The final regulations have expanded on the requirements necessary for a plan to be reinstated after a lapse in premium payments. Reinstatement must occur prior to the time any participant's benefits would be reduced because of the lapse.

Another requirement in the proposed regulations is the prohibition of policy loans on the insurance contracts issued under the plan. The final regulations provide that an application of funds by the issuer to pay premiums due on the contracts will not be considered policy loans for purposes of this prohibition if certain conditions are satisfied.

OTHER CHANGES

The final regulations make it clear that an insurance contract plan may be funded by a combination of individual and group contracts if certain requirements are satisfied. A clarifying change was made to the final regulations to make it clear that the group contracts are being compared to individual contracts which have been approved for sale in the relevant state.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these proposed regulations was Richard J. Wickersham of the Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to 26 CFR Part 1 are hereby adopted:

§ 1.412(i)-1 Certain insurance contract plans.

(a) In general. Under section 412 (h)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by section 1013(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (88 Stat. 914) (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), an insurance contract plan described in section 412(i) for a plan year is not subject to the minimum funding requirements of section 412 for that plan year. Consequently, if an individual or group insurance contract plan satisfies all of the requirements of paragraph (b)(2) or (c)(2) of this section, whichever are applicable, for the plan year, the plan is not subject to the requirements of section 412 for that plan year. The effective date for section 412 of the Code is determined under section 1017 of the Act. In general, in the case of a plan which was not in existence on January 1, 1974, this section applies for plan years beginning after September 2, 1974, and in the case of a plan in existence on January 1, 1974, to plan years beginning after December 31, 1975.

(b) Individual insurance contract plans. (1) An individual insurance contract plan is described in section 412(i) during a plan year if the plan satisfies the requirements of paragraph (b)(2) of this section for the plan year.

(2) The requirements of this subparagraph are:

(i) The plan must be funded exclusively by the purchase from an insurance company or companies (licensed under the law of a State or the District of Columbia to do business with the plan) of individual annuity or individual insurance contracts, or a combination thereof. The purchase may be made either directly by the employer or through the use of a custodial account or trust. A plan shall not be considered to be funded otherwise than exclusively by the purchase of individual annuity or individual insurance contracts merely because the employer makes a payment necessary to comply with the provisions of section 411(c)(2) (relating to accrued benefit from employee contributions).

(ii) The individual annuity or individual insurance contracts issued under the plan must provide for level annual, or more frequent, premium payments to be paid under the plan for the period commencing with the date each individual participating in the plan became a participant and ending not later than the normal retirement age for that individual or, if earlier, the date the individual ceases his participation in the plan. Premium payments may be considered to be level even though items such as experience gains and dividends are applied against premiums. In the case of an increase in benefits, the contracts must provide for level annual payments with respect to such increase to be paid for the period commencing at the time the increase becomes effective. If payment commences on the first payment date under the contract occurring after the date an individual becomes a participant or after the effective date of an increase in benefits, the requirements of this subdivision will be satisfied even though payment does not commence on the date on which the individual's participation commenced or on the effective date of the benefit increase, whichever is applicable. If an individual accrues benefits after his normal retirement age, the requirements of this subdivision are satisfied if payment is made at the time such benefits accrue. If the provisions required by this subdivision are set forth in a separate agreement with the issuer of the individual contracts, they need not be included in the individual contracts.

(iii) The benefits provided by the plan for each individual participant must be equal to the benefits provided under his individual contracts at his normal retirement age under the plan provisions.

(iv) The benefits provided by the plan for each individual participant must be guaranteed by the life insurance company, described in paragraph (b)(2)(i) of this section, issuing the individual contracts to the extent premiums have been paid.

(v) Except as provided in the following sentence, all premiums payable for the plan year, and for all prior plan years, under the insurance or annuity contracts must have been paid before lapse. If the lapse has occurred during the plan year, the requirements of this subdivision will be considered to have been met if reinstatement of the insurance policy, under which the individual insurance contracts are issued, occurs during the year of the lapse and before distribution is made or benefits commence to any participant whose benefits are reduced because of the lapse.

(vi) No rights under the individual contracts may have been subject to a security interest at any time during the plan year. This subdivision shall not apply to contracts which have been distributed to participants if the security interest is created after the date of distribution.

(vii) No policy loans, including loans to individual participants, on any of the individual contracts may be outstanding at any time during the plan year. This subdivision shall not apply to contracts which have been distributed to participants if the loan is made after the date of distribution. An application of funds by the issuer to pay premiums due under the contracts shall be deemed not to be a policy loan if the amount of the funds so applied, and interest thereon, is repaid during the plan year in which the funds are applied and before distribution is made or benefits commence to any participant whose benefits are reduced because of such application.

(c) Group insurance contract plans. (1) A group insurance contract plan is described in section 412(i) during a plan year if the plan satisfies the requirements of subparagraph (2) for the plan year.

(2) The requirements of this subparagraph are:

(i) The plan must be funded exclusively by the purchase from an insurance company or companies, described in paragraph (b)(2)(i) of this section, of group annuity or group insurance contracts, or a combination thereof. The purchase may be made either directly by the employer or through the use of a custodial account or trust. A plan shall not be considered to be funded otherwise than exclusively by the purchase of group annuity or group insurance contracts merely because the employer makes a payment necessary to comply with the provisions of section 411(c)(2) (relating to accrued benefit derived from employee contributions).

(ii) In the case of a plan funded by a group insurance contract or a group annuity contract the requirements of paragraph (b)(2)(ii) of this section must be satisfied by the group contract issued under the plan. Thus, for example, each individual participant's benefits under the group contract must be provided for by level annual, or more frequent, payments equivalent to the payments required to satisfy such paragraph. The requirements of this subdivision will not be satisfied if benefits for any individual are not provided for by level payments made on his behalf under the group contract.

(iii) The group annual or group insurance contract must satisfy the requirements of clauses (iii), (iv), (v), (vi), and (vii) of paragraph (b)(2). Thus, for example, each participant's benefits provided by the plan must be equal to his benefits provided under the group contract at his normal retirement age.

(iv)(A) If the plan is funded by a group annuity contract, the value of the benefits guaranteed by the insurance company issuing the contract under the plan with respect to each participant under the contract must not be less than the value of such benefits which the cash surrender value would provide for that participant under any individual annuity contract plan satisfying the requirements of paragraph (b) and approved for sale in the State where the principal office of the plan is located.

(B) If the plan is funded by a group insurance contract, the value of the benefits guaranteed by the insurance company issuing the contract under the plan with respect to each participant under the contract must not be less than the value of such benefits which the cash surrender value would provide for that participant under any individual insurance contract plan satisfying the requirements of paragraph (b) and approved for sale in the State where the principal office of the plan is located.

(v) Under the group annuity or group insurance contract, premiums or other consideration received by the insurance company (and, if a custodial account or trust is used, the custodian or trustee thereof) must be allocated to purchase individual benefits for participants under the plan. A plan which maintains unallocated funds in an auxiliary trust fund or which provides that an insurance company will maintain unallocated funds in a separate account, such as a group deposit administration contract, does not satisfy the requirements of this subdivision.

(d) Combination of plans. A plan which is funded by a combination of individual contracts and a group contract shall be treated as a plan described in section 412(i) for the plan year if the combination, in the aggregate, satisfies the requirements of this section for the plan year.

Foreign insurance company; no U.S. agent; reinsurance of U.S. risks. A foreign insurance company, which is not engaged in the conduct of trade or business in the U.S., reinsures risks that were initially assumed by other insurance companies and that are located in the U.S. The policies are neither signed nor countersigned in the U.S. by any officer or agent of the foreign insurance company. The premiums paid on such policies are subject to the excise tax imposed by section 4371(3) of the Code. The premiums received are not subject to either taxation under section 881 or withholding under section 1442. I.T. 1359 and I.T. 3061 amplified and superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-222

ISSUE

Are the insurance premiums received by M under the circumstances described below subject to taxation under section 881 of the Internal Revenue Code, in light of the position stated in I.T. 1359, I-1 C.B. 292 (1922), with respect to the taxability of certain insurance premiums?

FACTS

M is a foreign casualty insurance company organized under the laws of country X. Its principal business is the reinsurance of risks initially assumed by other insurance companies, some of which are risks located in the United States and are, therefore, United States risks within the meaning of section 861(a)(7) of the Code. The policies issued by M for the reinsurance of these risks are neither signed nor countersigned in the United States by any officer or agent of M. M is not otherwise engaged in the conduct of any insurance business in the United States within the meaning of section 842 or the conduct of any trade or business in the United States within the meaning of section 864(b). The policies of reinsurance referred to above are subject to the excise tax imposed by section 4371(3).

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 881(a) of the Code imposes a tax of 30 percent of the amount received by foreign corporations from sources within the United States as premiums and other fixed or determinable annual or periodical income to the extent such amount is not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States.

Section 1442 of the Code provides for the withholding from foreign corporations of a 30-percent tax in the same manner and on the same items of income as is provided in section 1441.

Section 1441(a) of the Code requires all persons paying any of the items of income listed in subsection (b) to any nonresident alien individual that constitutes gross income from sources within the United States to deduct and withhold a tax of 30 percent from such items. Subsection (b) includes in the list of these income items "premiums" and "other fixed or determinable annual or periodical income."

Section 4371 of the Code imposes a tax of a specified percentage of the premiums paid on each policy of insurance or reinsurance issued by a foreign insurer or reinsurer covering a United States risk. However, such policies that are signed or countersigned by an insurer's officer or agent in a state or the District of Columbia, within which the insurer is authorized to do business, are specifically excepted by section 4373(1) from the imposition of this excise tax.

I.T. 1359 concludes that insurance premiums received from insuring United States risks by foreign insurance companies not engaged in the conduct of any trade or business in the United States are not fixed or determinable and, thus, are not subject to withholding under the predecessor of section 1442 of the Code. See also I.T. 3061, 1937-1 C.B. 114. I.T. 1359 gives two reasons for this conclusion: (1) Congress, in enacting the withholding provisions, intended to require withholding on only those kinds of gross income items having a high content of net income, but insurance premiums do not have this high content of net income and often yield a loss; and (2) the impracticability of collecting an income tax on premiums from which little net income, if any, is derived was one reason Congress retained the stamp tax (Revenue Act of 1918, Title XI, Schedule A, paragraph 15, the predecessor of the section 4371 excise tax) on premiums received by insurance companies not engaged in a trade or business in the United States.

The legislative history of the stamp tax supports the result reached in I.T. 1359. Its history demonstrates that Congress did not believe that any income tax, including a withholding tax, was applicable to insurance premiums paid to foreign insurance companies not engaged in a trade or business in the United States. Thus, in order to eliminate the competitive imbalance created by the fact that such foreign insurance companies, unlike their domestic competitors, were not subject to any United States income tax, Congress imposed the stamp tax on premiums received by such foreign insurance companies. See 61 Cong. Rec. 7180-81 (1921); Hearings on H.R. 7378 Before the Senate Finance Comm. (Vol. 1), 77th Cong., 1st Sess. 121-22 (1942); H.R. Rep. No. 2333, 77th Cong., 1st Sess. 61 (1942), 1942-2 C.B. 372, 420.

Subsequent to the publication of I.T. 1359, Congress has taken legislative action with respect to the taxation of insurance premiums received by foreign insurance companies that is consistent with the conclusion reached in I.T. 1359. Congress, aware of I.T. 1359's holding for many years, has consistently reenacted both the insurance and withholding tax provisions without altering the result in I.T. 1359. See, e.g., Message From the President of the United States (Exhibit VIII), Doc. No. 140, 87th Cong., 1st Sess. 289-290 (1961), which restates the rationale of I.T. 1359 and notes that a 30-percent withholding tax on the premiums "would destroy a normal and essential channel of insurance business, which is important to the American economy where only a foreign company is equipped to handle the risk."

In the Revenue Act of 1962, Pub. L. 87-834, 1962-3 C.B. 111, Congress added section 952 to the Code, which treats income not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States and derived from the insurance of United States risks by a controlled foreign corporation as "subpart F income" that is taxable currently to certain United States shareholders of such corporations. This section was added on the assumption that the 30-percent withholding tax did not apply to such insurance premium income. This treatment was considered necessary in order to prevent tax avoidance schemes that would not have been possible if such premiums were subject to the 30-percent tax imposed by section 881(a). See H.R. Rep. No. 1447, 87th Cong., 2d Sess. 60 (1962), 1962-3 C.B. 405, 464; 108 Cong. Rec. 5305 (1962).

These actions taken by Congress without any attempt to reverse the longstanding position stated in I.T. 1359 indicate that I.T. 1359 correctly states the tax law applicable to the premiums under consideration. See United States v. Correll, 389 U.S. 299, 305-06 (1967), 1968-1 C.B. 64.

HOLDING

The insurance premiums received by M under the circumstances described above are not subject to taxation under section 881 of the Code and, therefore, are not subject to the withholding of tax under section 1442.

EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

I.T. 1359 and I.T. 3061 are amplified and superseded since the position stated therein is restated under current law in this revenue ruling.

Rev. Rul. 80-223

ISSUE

Does the enactment of sections 901 (f) and 907 of the Internal Revenue Code by the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, Pub. L. 94-12, 1975-1 C.B. 545, 561 (the "1975 Act") supersede inconsistent provisions of income tax treaties with foreign countries entered into prior to the enactment of these sections?

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 901(f) of the Code provides that the foreign tax credit is not allowable for certain payments made to foreign countries with respect to oil or gas in which the taxpayer has no economic interest and which is purchased or sold at a price that differs from the fair market value for such oil or gas.

Section 907 of the Code provides for a reduction of the amount of foreign income taxes paid or accrued with respect to foreign oil and gas extraction income and for the separate application of the credit limitation of section 904 to foreign oil related income and to other taxable income.

Section 7852(d) of the Code provides that no provision of the Code shall apply in any case in which its application would be contrary to any provision of a treaty in effect on the date of the enactment of the 1954 Code. This section indicates, in effect, that a mere inconsistency, without more, between a provision in a tax treaty and an amendment to the Code is not enough by itself to override the treaty provision. However, the general provision of section 7852(d) does not prevent Congress from passing legislation that, in effect, overrides a treaty provision.

Article VI, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution provides that both the laws of the United States and treaties shall be the supreme law of the land.

Sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code are not inconsistent with treaties that incorporate the foreign tax credit provisions of the Code as it may be amended from time to time or any treaty that provides for a per-country limitation but specifically indicates that changes in United States domestic law which do not eliminate the general principle of the foreign tax credit are not inconsistent with the treaty. See Article 20 of the United States-Poland Income Tax Convention, 1977-1 C.B. 416, 423. However, sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code are inconsistent with treaties that provide for foreign tax credits determined pursuant to the foreign tax credit provisions of the Code in effect as of dates specified in such treaties. See Article XV of the United States-Republic of Austria Income Tax Convention, 1957-2 C.B. 985, 990. Subsequent legislation amending the foreign tax credit provisions of the Code will normally not affect these treaties unless Congress clearly manifests an intention to do so.

Because treaties and acts of Congress are given equal weight by the Constitution as domestic law, Congress has the authority to overrule the effect of a treaty by subsequent legislation. When an act of Congress and a treaty relate to the same subject, the courts will endeavor to construe them so as to give effect to both, if this can be done without violating the language of either. The courts do not favor repudiation of an earlier treaty by implication and require clear indications that Congress, in enacting subsequent inconsistent legislation, meant to supersede the earlier treaty. Head Money Cases, 112 U.S. 580, 597-99 (1884); United States v. Payne, 264 U.S. 446, 448 (1924); Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States, 391 U.S. 404, 413 (1967). An example of such a clear indication is the presence of subsequent inconsistent legislation together with a committee report indicating that Congress intended such legislation to supersede the earlier treaty. In Cook v. United States, 288 U.S. 102 (1933), subsequent inconsistent legislation was held not to supersede an earlier treaty provision because neither the committee reports nor the debates on the subsequent legislation mentioned the earlier treaty. It is, therefore, necessary to examine the legislative history underlying the enactment of sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code for a clear indication from Congress as to whether it intended these sections to supersede any provision of treaties entered into prior to the enactment of these sections.

Sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code were enacted by Congress in section 601 of the 1975 Act. Neither the 1975 Act nor the committee reports and congressional debates accompanying the Act contain any language or discussion dealing with the effect of these sections on tax treaties. These provisions had previously been proposed as part of the Oil and Gas Energy Act of 1974 and again as part of the Energy Tax and Individual Relief Act of 1974. The committee reports on these provisions, as proposed, also do not discuss their effect on treaties. Thus, the effect of these sections was not considered in any of the legislative history leading up to the actual enactment of sections 901 (f) and 907 by the 1975 Act. Therefore, at the time of their enactment, Congress left no clear indication as to its intention with respect to the application of the new sections to treaties that do not incorporate the foreign tax credit provisions of the Code as amended from time to time.

Section 1031 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 96 (the "1976 Act") amended section 904 of the Code by repealing the per-country limitation.

This amendment was inconsistent with treaties that provide for the per-country limitation by incorporating the foreign tax credit provisions of the Code in force as of dates specified in such treaties. However, the committee reports on this amendment express the clear intention of Congress to supersede these treaty provisions. See Rev. Rul. 80-201, 1980-30 I.R.B. 14.

In discussing the elimination of the per-country limitation the committee reports state that it is intended that all existing treaties are to be applied consistently with the amendment of section 904 by the 1976 Act. See S. Rep. No. 94-938, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 237 (1976), 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 3) 49, 275. In a footnote to this report (footnote 19) the committee states:

> The committee further intends that, as in the case with other recent legislation modifying the foreign tax credit, the amendments made by the committee's bill are to be used in computing the credit allowed under all treaties (emphasis added).

This same footnote also appears in H.R. Rep. No. 94-658, 94th Cong., 1d Sess. 226 (1976), 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 2) 701, 918. This reference to "other recent legislation" indicates that when Congress passed sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code it intended to supersede any inconsistent treaty provisions. No other significant legislation affecting the foreign tax credit was passed by the 94th Congress.

Statutes are normally construed with reference to circumstances existing at the time of the passage of the statutes. Therefore, comments made by a subsequent Congress on the meaning of an earlier Congress are not considered part of the legislative history of the earlier act. United States v. Wise, 370 U.S. 405 (1962). They are entitled to consideration as a secondarily authoritative expression of expert opinion. Waterman Steamship Corp. v. United States, 381 U.S. 252 (1965), 1965-2 C.B. 465; Pennsylvania Mutual Co. v. Ledever, 252 U.S. 523 (1920).

However, in this case, it was the same Congress (the 94th Congress) that enacted sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code in the 1975 Act and then that commented on this enactment in its reports on the 1976 Act while amending sections 904 and 907. The closer in time that a later legislative comment is to the original enactment and the greater the continuity of the Congress, the more persuasive the comment may be considered to be. Sioux Tribe of Indians v. United States, 316 U.S. 317 (1942); Tri-Lakes S. S. Co. v. Commissioner, 146 F.2d 970 (6th Cir. 1945); Associated Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. United States, 306 F.2d 824 (2d Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 371 U.S. 950 (1962). In this case, the comments made in 1976 by the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee were made by the same committees of the same Congress that passed the original versions of sections 901(f) and 907 in 1975.

If subsequent comments in committee reports of Congress about what it meant years earlier in enacting a law are made in conjunction with legislation amending the earlier law, and the amendatory legislation assumes the correctness of such comments, the comments are entitled to great weight in statutory construction. Mount Sinai Hospital of Greater Miami, Inc. v. Weinberger, 517 F.2d 329 (5th Cir. 1975). Although no amendments were made to section 901(f) of the Code by the 1976 Act, several amendments were made to section 907. Congress made these amendments on the assumption that section 907 supersedes all inconsistent treaty provisions. Moreover, since much of section 907 was amended or enacted by the 1976 Act, the statement in the committee reports that the amendments are to be used in computing the credit allowed under all treaties applies specifically to the amendments of section 907. There is no reason why Congress would intend part of section 907 to apply to all treaties but not the rest of section 907 or the integrally related section 901(f).

HOLDING

The enactment of sections 901(f) and 907 of the Code by the 1975 Act supersede inconsistent provisions of all income tax treaties, those in effect on the date of the enactment of the 1954 Code as well as those in effect after this date.

Section 2513.—Gift by Husband or Wife to Third Party

26 CFR 25.2513-2: Manner and time of signifying consent.

Split gifts; consent of spouse after due date of return. Spouses may not elect under section 2513 of the Code to split gifts made by one spouse after the donor spouse has filed a gift tax return reporting the gifts and the due date for filing the return has passed.

Rev. Rul. 80-224

ISSUE

Under section 2513 of the Internal Revenue Code, can spouses elect to split gifts made by one spouse, after the donor spouse has filed a gift tax return reporting the gifts and the due date for filing the return has passed?

FACTS

A gift tax return reporting gifts made by G during the fourth quarter of 1978 was filed on February 15, 1979, the due date for such a return. There was no indication on the return that G's spouse, S, consented to have G's gifts to third parties considered as made one-half by each spouse. In May 1979 S filed a gift tax return and G filed an amended gift tax return. Both returns were for the fourth quarter of 1978 and indicated the consent of both spouses to split the gifts that were made by G and that were reported on the previously filed return.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2513(a) of the Code provides that a gift made by a donor to any person other than a spouse shall be considered as made one-half by the donor and one-half by the donor's spouse, if both spouses have signified their consent to split all such gifts made during the calendar quarter, as provided in section 2513(b).

Section 2513(b)(2) of the Code provides that such consent may be signified at any time after the close of the calendar quarter in which the gift was made, subject to certain limitations. One of those limitations is that the consent may not be signified after the due date of the gift tax return unless before the due date of the return neither spouse has filed a return for that calendar quarter. If, by the due date, neither spouse has filed a gift tax return for the calendar quarter, the consent may not be signified after a return for such quarter has been filed by either spouse.

The consent to split gifts may not be made after one spouse has filed a return with respect to the gifts and the due date for filing the return has passed. A failure to comply with a statutory condition for making an election in the first return filed precludes the taxpayer from subsequently attempting to make such election, even through the failure may be due to an oversight, an error in judgment or a lack of knowledge of the law. See McLean v. United States, Civil No. 78-1186 (N.D. Cal., March 28, 1979), Thorrez v. Commissioner, 31 T.C. 655 (1958), aff'd per curiam, 272 F.2d 945 (6th Cir. 1959).

HOLDING

Spouses may not elect to have gifts considered as made one-half by each spouse under section 2513 of the Code after one spouse has filed a gift tax return reporting the gifts and the due date for filing the return has passed.

26 CFR 46.4371-2: Imposition of tax on policies issued by foreign insurers; scope of tax.

Whether insurance premiums received by foreign corporations, which are not engaged in the conduct of a trade or business in the United States, on policies of reinsurance of United States risks, which were initially assumed by other insurance companies, that are subject to the excise tax imposed by section 4371(3) of the Code not subject to the income tax imposed by section 881 and to the withholding provisions of section 1442. Foreign insurance company; U.S. agent; surplus lines insurance. A foreign insurance company, which is not licensed in a particular state, conducts a surplus lines insurance business in that state through a licensed broker that acts as the company's agent, regularly signs and countersigns policies, and settles losses arising from such policies. The excise tax imposed by section 4371 of the Code does not apply to premiums paid to the foreign insurance company on such policies.

Rev. Rul. 80-225

ISSUE

Does the federal excise tax imposed by section 4371 of the Internal Revenue Code on foreign insurance policies apply to insurance premiums paid to a foreign insurance company under the facts described below?

FACTS

Company X is a foreign casualty insurance company, conducting a surplus lines insurance business. Surplus lines insurance involves insuring risks which licensed insurers (those licensed to conduct an insurance business in the state) are unwilling to accept.

X has not obtained a license to conduct any insurance business under the laws of State A. However, in determining that no licensed market for a risk exists, a person licensed by State A as a surplus lines broker is permitted by the laws of State A to place the risk with an eligible surplus lines insurer, such as X, that is not licensed to conduct insurance business in State A. Thus, the laws of State A allow X to conduct a surplus lines insurance business in State A to the extent of signing or countersigning surplus lines insurance policies in the state covering the above risks and settling claims arising thereunder.

Company Y is licensed by State A as a surplus lines broker. Y regularly signs and countersigns surplus lines insurance policies in State A as agent for X with respect to surplus insurance risks, wholly or partly, within the State A and settles losses arising thereunder in X's name.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4371 of the Code imposes a tax on each policy of insurance or reinsurance issued by any foreign insurer or reinsurer.

Under section 4373 of the Code, the tax does not apply to any policy signed or countersigned by an officer or agent of the insurer in a state, or in the District of Columbia, within which such insurer is authorized to do business.

Congress adopted section 4371 because it did not believe that any United States income tax (including withholding tax) was applicable to insurance premiums paid to foreign insurance companies not engaged in trade or business in the United States. See generally Rev. Rul. 80-222, page 10 of this Bulletin.

As a result of Y's regularly signing and countersigning policies in State A as agent for X, X is engaged in a trade or business in the United States under sections 842 and 864 of the Code and is thus subject to income tax under section 831 on its underwriting income derived from the premiums received on the policies described above. See, e.g., Amodio v. Commissioner, 34 T.C. 894, 906 (1960), holding a nonresident alien taxpayer to be engaged in a trade or business in the United States as a result of activities performed on its behalf by an independent agent of the taxpayer in the United States.

Although X is not licensed to conduct an insurance business in State A, the laws of State A permit X to engage in certain surplus lines insurance activities in State A (the signing or countersigning of policies) without obtaining a license, and as a result of regularly performing these activities, X is engaged in a trade or business in the United States. Thus, with respect to the policies described above, X is authorized to do a surplus lines insurance business in State A within the meaning of section 4373(1) of the Code.

HOLDING

The excise tax imposed by section 4371 of the Code does not apply to the premiums on those policies paid to X, provided X is engaged in a U.S. trade or business with respect to the underwriting income derived by X from those premiums.

Compare Rev. Rul. 80-222, which relates to a situation where a foreign insurer is not engaged in business in the United States and is not subject to U.S. income tax, but is subject to the excise tax imposed by sections 4371 of the Code.

"(i) Special Rules With Respect to Employment of Day Care Workers.—

"(4) Limitation.—The amount of the credit, as determined under paragraph (2), with respect to any employee shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) an amount equal to $6,000 minus the amount of the funds reimbursed to the taxpayer with respect to such employee from funds made available pursuant to section 2007 of the Social Security Act; or

"(B) with respect to work incentive program expenses attributable to service rendered—

"(i) during the one-year period which begins on the day such employee begins work for the taxpayer, an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(I) $3,000, or

"(ii) during the one-year period which begins on the day after the last day of the one-year period described in clause (i), an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(I) $1,500, or

"(II) 25 percent of the sum of the amount of the unreimbursed wages of such employee and the amount reimbursed to the taxpayer with respect to such employee from funds made available pursuant to section 2007 of the Social Security Act."

(2) Section 50B(h) (1) (B) of such Code is amended by inserting "(except as provided in subsection (i))" after "full-time basis".

[84] CHANGES TO COORDINATE TAX CREDIT AND SOCIAL SERVICES PROVISIONS

Present law.—The amount of wages eligible to be paid for through the social services program was limited to $4,000 in the case of proprietary employers on the presumption that they would claim the 20 percent tax credit and thus receive full reimbursement for the first $5,000 of wages paid. The tax credit, however, is computed only on the net wages actually paid by the employer after deducting any reimbursement he receives from other sources. Thus, if an employer pays wages of $5,000 and receives a social services grant to meet $4,000 of that total, his tax credit would have been computed only on the remaining $1,000. Under the former tax credit provisions this would have provided a tax credit of $200 (20 percent of $1,000). H.R. 12973 as reported by the Finance Committee last year would have permitted any wages reimbursed under the social services provisions to be included in computing the tax credit. However, because the tax credit percentage has now been increased to 50 percent for the first year wages and 25 percent for the second year wages, this change could result in a total reimbursement exceeding 100 percent of costs. H.R. 12973 included an overall limit of $1,000 on the credit to avoid such situations. Even with such a limit, however, there could still be instances of more than 100 percent reimbursement.

Committee bill.—The committee amendment would permit employers who hire welfare recipients in child care jobs to include any costs reimbursed under the title XX grant program in computing their tax credit. The amount of the credit would, however, be reduced to whatever extent necessary so that the combination of title XX grant and tax credit would never exceed 100 percent of the first $6,000 of wages paid to the employee. The amendment is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

CREDIT MADE APPLICABLE TO PART-TIME EMPLOYMENT

Present law.—H.R. 12973, as reported last year by the Committee, also modified the tax credit as applicable to child care jobs so that the tax credit and the related reimbursement under the social services provisions could be used for part-time as well as full-time employment. The tax credit is restricted to employees who have been employed for at least 30 days on a substantially full-time basis. The purpose of this change was to make the credit and payment provisions available in cases where the child care facility might hire, for example, two welfare recipients on a half-time basis for $4,000 per year each to perform a job for which they might otherwise hire a single full-time employee at a salary of $8,000 per year.

[85] Committee bill.—Effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, the Committee amendment would permit the tax credit and related title XX grant provisions to be applied to part-time as well as full-time employment by welfare recipients in child care jobs.

CHANGES RELATED TO PUBLIC LAW 95-600 [1978-3 C.B. (VOL. 1) 1]

Present law.—The 1978 tax reduction act (Public Law 95-600) made several significant changes in the tax credit provisions for hiring welfare recipients. Under prior law, the tax credit for hiring welfare recipients in child care jobs was limited to 20 percent of the first $5,000 of wages and was available only through September 30, 1978. Effective January 1, 1979, the new law treats child care jobs in the same manner as other employment for purposes of the tax credit. The credit is made permanent and applies to the first $6,000 of wages (at a 50 percent rate in the first year and a 25 percent rate in the second year).

Committee bill.—The committee amendment contains several provisions related to the changes made by Public Law 95-600:

1. The title XX grant provisions would be conformed to the $6,000 maximum wages creditable for the tax provision. (That is, grants up to $5,000 per eligible employee could be made for profit-making child care facilities and up to $6,000 for public and nonprofit facilities.)

2. The former tax credit provisions for child care jobs are reinstated for the period October 1, 1978 to December 31, 1978. (After that date, the new provisions of Public Law 95-600 are effective under existing law.)

3. A number of technical amendments are made to perfect the transition provisions in Public Law 95-600 and to rectify certain clerical errors in that statute.

2d Session

ADOPTION ASSISTANCE, CHILD WELFARE, AND SOCIAL SERVICES

April 23, 1980.

Mr. Ullman, from the committee of conference, submitted the following conference report to accompany H.R. 3431.[1]

Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of Conference

* * * * *

Permanent Extension of Provisions Relating to Child Day Care Services and WIN Tax Credit
(Sec. 208)

Present law.—Employers of AFDC recipients who are placed in jobs under the WIN program, or who have received AFDC for at least 90 days, are eligible for a tax credit equal to 50% of up to $6,000 of wages per employee for the first year of employment and 25% of such wages for the second year.

House bill.—Present law.

Senate bill.—The Senate bill would permit employers who receive Title XX grants for purposes of hiring welfare recipients in child care jobs to elect to include such grants in wages eligible for the tax credit. For taxpayers who so elect, the credit amount would be limited so that the total amount of the credit plus the grant could not exceed the lesser of $6,000 or 100% of total wages paid to the employee. In addition, the bill would allow the tax credit for persons employed on a part-time basis in child care jobs and would make certain technical amendments to correct errors in the Revenue Act of 1978 [1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1].

Conference agreement.—The conference agreement maintains the current law provision which provides that the credit is not allowed for wages reimbursed by a grant. The conference agreement provides, however, for a special 100-percent credit with respect to unreimbursed wages paid to workers whose wages are reimbursed in whole or in part by funds made available under section 2007 (grants to hire welfare recipients as child care workers) of the Social Security Act. If the taxpayer elects to compute the credit using this rate, the credit with respect to any employee is limited to the least of: (1) $6,000 minus the reimbursement with respect to this employee under section 2007, (2) $3,000 (for the first year of employment) or $1,500 (for the second year of employment), or (3) 50 percent (for the first year of employment) or 25 percent (for the second year of employment) of the sum of unreimbursed wages and the reimbursement under section 2007.

The conference agreement includes the Senate provision with regard to the eligibility of part-time child care workers for the credit. Regulations should define a minimum standard for part-time employment, such as 8 hours per week for the first 4 weeks of employment, to ensure that employees are eligible only if they have established a regular employment relationship with the employer.

26 CFR 601.105: Examinations of returns and claims for refund credit or abatement; determination of correct tax liability.

Rev. Proc. 80-33

In this revenue procedure, the Assistant Secretary (Tax Policy) of the Treasury prescribes revised effective dates for Rev. Proc. 79-26, 1979-1 C.B. 566 and Rev. Proc. 79-35, 1979-2 C.B. 498, both of which prescribed certain changes to Rev. Proc. 77-10, 1977-1 C.B. 548, regarding the Class Life Asset Depreciation Range system.

The effective date of Rev. Proc. 79-26, concerning waste reduction and resource recovery plants, central steam utility production and distribution, electric utility steam production plants, gas utility manufactured gas production plants, and industrial steam and electric generation and/or distribution systems, is revised to be April 30, 1979. The effective date of Rev. Proc. 79-35, concerning the manufacture of chemicals and allied products and the manufacture of professional, scientific, and controlling instruments, is revised to be July 16, 1979. These new effective dates are the dates of publication in the Internal Revenue Bulletin and are to be applied in accordance with section 1.167(a)-11(b)(4) of the Income Tax Regulations. That is, the asset guideline classes, periods, and ranges determined for such periods in effect as of the last day of a taxable year of election shall apply to all vintage accounts of such taxable year, except that neither the asset guideline period nor the lower limit of the asset depreciation range for any such account shall be longer than the asset guideline period or lower limit of the asset depreciation range, as the case may be, for such account in effect as of the first day of the taxable year.

Also, under the provisions of section 1.167(a)-11(b)(4) of the regulations this revenue procedure expressly provides that taxpayers, who were precluded from depreciating assets by application of Rev. Proc. 79-26 and Rev. Proc. 79-35 because of the prior effective dates, may, if tax returns have been filed for the taxable year beginning prior to January 1, 1979, at their option, utilize the asset depreciation ranges or periods described therein by filing an amended return in accordance with section 301.6402-3 of the regulations, provided section 1.167(a)-11(b)(4), as stated above, is applicable.

Rev. Procs. 79-26 and 79-35 modified.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

Form 6458, Certification and Election Form

Announcement 80-106 [1]

A new form for making certifications and elections under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, Pub. L. 96-223, 1980-3 C.B. 1, is now available at Service district offices.

Eligible producers may use Form 6458, Certification and Election Form, to certify exemption from the windfall profit tax. Independent producers may use the form to certify that they are entitled to a lower windfall profit tax withholding rate. Both exempt and independent producers should use it to revoke any previous certification.

Purchasers and qualified operators may use Form 6458 to make or terminate a joint election for the operator to do the administrative duties normally done by the purchaser. Operators also may use the form to submit to the Service documents certifying that a project qualifies as an incremental tertiary production project or documents notifying the Service that a project no longer qualifies.

The instructions for Form 6458 have been revised to indicate that it is not necessary to file the form with the Service when Part II, Independent Producer Certificates, is completed.

U.S.—Trinidad and Tobago Income Tax Treaty—Public Meeting

Announcement 80-110 [1]

The Treasury Department today announced that it will hold a public meeting on August 27, 1980, to solicit the views of interested persons on issues being considered in the revisions of the existing income tax treaty between the United States and Trinidad and Tobago.

The public meeting will be held at the Treasury Department at 2:00 p.m. in room 4121. Persons interested in attending are requested to give notice in writing by August 22, 1980, of their intention to attend. Notices should be sent to Joel Rabinovitz, Deputy International Tax Counsel, Department of the Treasury, Room 4013, Washington D.C. 20220.

The present treaty, which has been in force since December 30, 1970, is being renegotiated at the initiative of Trinidad and Tobago. Among the issues on which the Treasury would welcome comments are the tax treatment of technical, management, and consulting services, equipment leasing, and offshore oil drilling. It would be useful to know how these activities are conducted in Trinidad and Tobago and any attendant tax problems. Comments on other provisions of the existing treaty are also welcome. Persons unable to attend the meeting are invited to submit written comments.

The adoption of the resolution satisfies the requirement of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) of the regulations that "some other similar official action" must be taken prior to commencement of construction, and the bonds will qualify for the exception provisions of section 103(b)(4) of the Code. There were valid business reasons for the transfer, and at the time of the transfer there was an intracompany account payable due from the division whose assets were transferred. The original corporation received "other property" within the meaning of section 351(b) of the Code and must recognize gain in the amount of the account payable.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

26 CFR 1.56-1: Imposition of tax.

Application of minimum tax to preference deductions that do not provide a tax benefit. See Rev. Rul. 80-226, below.

Minimum tax; tax benefit; preference deductions. Section 58(h) of the Code limits the application of the minimum tax to preference deductions that provide a tax benefit to the taxpayer. Steps to be followed in computing the minimum tax when a taxpayer has preference deductions that do not yield a tax benefit are provided.

Rev. Rul. 80-226

ISSUE

Does section 58(h) of the Internal Revenue Code limit the application of the minimum tax preference deductions that provide a tax benefit to the taxpayer?

FACTS

The taxpayer and the taxpayer's spouse filed a joint federal income tax return (Form 1040) for the year ended December 31, 1978, and elected to itemize deductions.

The taxpayers' combined gross income for 1978 was 260*x* dollars consisting of wages and capital gains. The taxpayers' deductions from gross income, in computing adjusted gross income, consisted of a section 1202 deduction for capital gains of 30*x* dollars and nonpreference deductions of 130*x* dollars, resulting in an adjusted gross income of 100*x* dollars from which to subtract their itemized deductions.

In itemizing their deductions the taxpayers claimed a medical expense deduction of 10*x* dollars and other itemized deductions of 155*x* dollars. The taxpayers also claimed personal exemptions totalling 5*x* dollars.

The taxpayers listed their adjusted itemized deductions on Form 4625 (Computation of Minimum Tax—Individuals), as 40*x* dollars (itemized deductions not in excess of adjusted gross income of 100*x* dollars or 100*x* dollars, less 60 percent of adjusted gross income or 60*x* dollars). The taxpayers also listed 30*x* dollars of capital gains preference.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 56(a) of the Code provides that in addition to the other taxes imposed by Chapter 1 of the Code, there is imposed for each taxable year, with respect to the income of every person, a tax equal to 15 percent of the amount by which the sum of the items of tax preference exceeds the greater of (1) $10,000 or (2) the regular tax deduction for the taxable year as determined under section 56(c).

Section 57(a) of the Code provides, for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1979, that adjusted itemized deductions for the taxable year of taxpayers other than corporations are items of tax preference subject to the 15 percent minimum tax. For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, adjusted itemized deductions are subject to an alternative minimum tax under section 55.

Section 57(b) of the Code defined "adjusted itemized deductions" for the taxable years beginning in or after 1977, but before January 1, 1979, as the amount by which the sum of the deductions for the taxable year other than (A) deductions allowable in arriving at adjusted gross income, (B) the deduction for personal exemptions, (C) the deduction for medical, dental, etc. expenses, (D) the deduction for casualty losses described in section 165(c)(3), and (E) the deduction allowable under section 691(c), exceeds 60 percent (but does not exceed 100 percent) of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for the taxable year.

Section 58(h) of the Code provides that items of tax preference are to be properly adjusted when the tax treatment giving rise to such items does not result in a reduction of the taxpayer's tax under subchapter A of Chapter 1 of the Code.

The intent of Congress in enacting section 58(h) of the Code was that tax preference items that are of no tax benefit to a taxpayer are not to be included in the computation of the minimum tax on tax preferences. See S. Rep. No. 94-938, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 113 (1976), 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 3) 151.

To the extent itemized deductions (other than medical expenses and casualty losses) exceed adjusted gross income they are not considered in the computations under section 57(b) for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1979. If itemized deductions do not otherwise provide a tax benefit, they are not subject to the minimum tax under section 58(h).

In determining the extent to which a taxpayer's tax preference items of deduction reduce the taxpayer's gross income and thereby provide a tax benefit, a taxpayer will be treated as using all nonpreference deductions first (other than those itemized deductions that exceed 100 percent of adjusted gross income computed without regard to preference deductions), followed by preference items of deduction to the extent necessary to reduce taxable income to zero. This approach will limit a taxpayer's items of tax preference to the excess of (1) taxable income computed without regard to preference items, over (2) taxable income computed with regard to preference items. This excess represents the actual tax benefit received by a taxpayer from preference items.

The amount of preference items yielding a tax benefit equals gross income minus the taxpayer's "preference exclusion." In the case of a taxpayer with an adjusted itemized deductions preference, the "preference exclusion" is computed by totalling (1) nonpreference deductions allowable in arriving at adjusted gross income, (2) medical deductions and casualty losses, (3) itemized deductions to the extent of 60 percent of adjusted gross income computed without regard to deductions which are preference items, and (4) the deductions for personal exemptions.

The preference exclusion in the present case, of 223*x* dollars, includes the 130*x* dollars of nonpreference deductions used in arriving at adjusted gross income, the medical expense deduction of 10*x* dollars, itemized deductions to the extent of 60 percent of adjusted gross income computed without regard to deductions which are preference items, 78*x* dollars, and personal exemptions of 5*x* dollars. These nonpreference items are subtracted from gross income to determine the amount of preference deductions from which the taxpayers have received a tax benefit. Thus, 223*x* dollars is subtracted from the taxpayers' gross income of 260*x* dollars yielding 37*x* dollars. The taxpayers have 70*x* dollars in preference items (30*x* dollars of capital gains preference plus adjusted itemized deductions equal to 40 percent of adjusted gross income, 40*x* dollars). Therefore, the taxpayers received a tax benefit from preference items to the extent of 37*x* dollars. The remaining 33*x* dollars of preference items did not yield the taxpayers any tax benefit and are not taken into account in computing their minimum tax liability.

HOLDING

The taxpayers' minimum tax for 1978 is computed by subtracting $10,000 from the 37*x* dollars for which they received a tax benefit and then taking 15 percent of that amount.

Section 58.—Rules for Application of This Part

Application of minimum tax to preference deductions that do not provide a tax benefit. See Rev. Rul. 80-226, page 25.

Section 103.—Interest on Certain Governmental Obligations

26 CFR 1.103-8: Interest on bonds to finance certain exempt facilities.

Industrial development bonds; exempt facility; resolution. The governing body of a political subdivision adopted a resolution, prior to the commencement of construction of an exempt facility, that evidenced its intent to issue industrial development bonds to provide financing for the facility. Before the bonds can be issued they must be approved by a state official, who has the complete power to approve or disapprove the issue. The adoption of the resolution satisfies the requirement of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) of the regulations that "some other similar official action" must be taken prior to commencement of construction, and the bonds will qualify for the exception provisions of section 103(b)(4) of the Code. Rev. Rul. 78-260 distinguished and Rev. Rul. 79-320 clarified.

Rev. Rul. 80-227

ISSUE

Will the adoption of a resolution to issue bonds by the issuer before commencement of construction satisfy the requirements of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) of the Income Tax Regulations when final approval of the bond issuance must subsequently be made by a specified state official under the circumstances described below?

FACTS AND LAW

Authority M is a political subdivision of state O that was formed under the Industrial Development Authority Act of O. On January 2, 1980, the governing body of M adopted a resolution evidencing the intent of M to issue industrial development bonds to finance the construction of a facility described in section 103(b)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code. The land on which the facility will be constructed is presently owned by M. The facility will be leased on a long-term basis to corporation X, a nonexempt person. On April 2, 1980, X obtained temporary financing and commenced construction of the facility on M's land. It is estimated that X will complete the facility and place it in use by March 1981.

M proposes to issue the bonds on January 2, 1981, and will use bond proceeds to reimburse X for the costs of construction. The Industrial Development Authority Act of O provides that before M may issue the bonds a specified official of O, after a public hearing, must determine that the facility will serve a public purpose, and that the financing of the facility is within the purview of the policy and authority of the Industrial Development Authority Act. Although the official's determination is to be based on the recommendation of M, the official has the complete discretion to approve or disapprove the bond issue. Neither M nor X may appeal the official's decision.

Section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) of the regulations provides that if the original use of a facility commences (or acquisition of a facility occurs) on or after the date of issue of obligations issued to provide such facility, a bond resolution with respect to such obligations must have been adopted by, or some other similar official action toward the issuance of such obligations must have been taken by, the issuer prior to the commencement of construction or acquisition of such facility in order for the facility to qualify as an exempt facility under section 103(b)(4) of the Code.

HOLDING

The adoption of the resolution by the governing body of M satisfies the requirement set forth in section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) of the regulations that "some other similar official action" must be taken prior to commencement of construction of the facility being financed by the bond issue.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 79-320, 1979-2 C.B. 35, concludes that the adoption by a governing body of a political subdivision of a resolution evidencing a present intent to have the political subdivision issue obligations to finance a specific exempt facility will satisfy the requirement of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) of the regulations provided such governing body is authorized to have such obligations issued. Rev. Rul. 79-320 also concludes that the governing body of a political subdivision that adopts a resolution to have the political subdivision issue obligations that is subject to voter approval has not evidenced a present intent to issue obligations that satisfies the requirement of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) on the date the resolution is adopted because the governing body lacks the necessary authority to have the obligations issued without prior voter approval. To the extent that these conclusions may imply that the authority of a governing body to cause the political subdivision to issue bonds must not be subject to any conditions on the date a resolution is adopted in order for such resolution to satisfy the requirement of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii), Rev. Rul. 79-320 is clarified. If, however, the conditions on the authority of the governing body result in the governing body not having the ability to express the present intent of the political subdivision to issue the obligations, a resolution adopted by the governing body will not satisfy the requirement of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii).

The situation in this revenue ruling is distinguishable from the situation described in Rev. Rul. 78-260, 1978-2 C.B. 99, as clarified by Rev. Rul. 79-320, 1979-42 I.R.B. 7, which holds that the adoption by the governing body of a political subdivision of a resolution to issue bonds subject to the approval of the voters of the political subdivision does not satisfy the requirements of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii) of the regualtions. The resolution described in Rev. Rul. 78-260 fails to qualify as "some other similar official action" of the issuer because only the voters could express the present intent of the issuer to issue bonds. Thus, in Rev. Rul. 78-260 the governing body of the issuer could not express the present intent of the issuer to issue the obligations without voter approval. In this revenue ruling, however, because the issuer acts only through its governing body the resolution of the governing body approving the issuance of the bonds does express the present intent of the issuer to issue the obligations in question so that the resolution qualifies as "some other similar official action" within the meaning of section 1.103-8(a)(5)(iii).

26 CFR 1.351-1: Transfer to corporation controlled by transferor.

Controlled corporations; transfers; intracompany account payable. A corporation that operated its business in two separate divisions transferred all of the assets of one division to a new corporation in exchange for all of the new corporation's stock. There were valid business reasons for the transfer, and at the time of the transfer there was an intracompany account payable due from the division whose assets were transferred. The original corporation received "other property" within the meaning of section 351(b) of the Code and must recognize gain in the amount of the account payable.

Rev. Rul. 80-228

ISSUE

In the facts described below, did X corporation receive "other property" from Y corporation within the meaning of section 351(b) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

X corporation operated its business in two entirely separate divisions ("Division 1" and "Division 2"), keeping a separate bank account and a separate set of books for each division. Each division also maintained an intracompany account in their respective books of account and transactions between the two divisions were recorded therein. For valid business reasons X organized a new corporation, Y. All the assets of Division 2 were transferred by X to Y at net book value in exchange for all of the stock of Y. At the time of the transfer, the intracompany account payable due to Division 1 from Division 2 was 100*x* dollars. On its opening balance sheet Y listed an account payable to X of 100*x* dollars and X, conversely, listed an account receivable from Y of 100*x* dollars. Within one year after the transfer the account payable of Y was paid in full to X.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

The nonrecognition provisions of 351(a) of the Code provide that where property is transferred to a corporation by one or more persons solely in exchange for stock or securities in such corporation and immediately after the exchange such person or persons are in control of the corporation, no gain or loss is recognized in the transaction. If, however, in addition to stock or securities, "other property" is received by the transferor, the transferor must recognize gain on the exchange but not in excess of the fair market value of the "other property" received pursuant to section 351(b).

It is a well established principle of tax law that short-term notes and other evidences of indebtedness received in a reorganization constitute "other property." See Cortland Specialty Co. v. Commissioner, 60 F.2d 937 (2nd Cir. 1932), XII-1 C.B. 164 and Pinellas Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Commissioner, 287 U.S. 462 (1933), XII-1 C.B. 161.

When Y was organized as a separate corporation, and an account payable from Y to X was established (and, correlatively, an account receivable was reflected by X on its books), a real liability on the part of Y (and a real asset on the part of X) came into being. The intracompany account payable (and the intracompany account receivable) did not simply "carry over" to the books of Y. Instead, X received something other than merely the stock of Y.

In the instant case the account receivable to X from Y was a note or other evidence of indebtedness received by X in a section 351 transaction and it constituted "other property" for purposes of section 351(b) of the Code. This is due to the fact that the preincorporation intracompany accounts could not have given rise to a debtor-creditor relationship between X and Y because X could not, prior to incorporation of Y, have been liable for a debt to itself. The intracompany accounts were mere bookkeeping entries by X, a single corporation, to show the activities of separate divisions for internal accounting purposes.

In Wham Construction Company, Inc. v. United States, Civil No. 72-689 (D.S.C., Feb. 16, 1976), aff'd Civil No. 76-2047 (4th Cir. 1979), on facts similar to those set forth above, the District Court, in holding for the taxpayer, determined that the account receivable represented a mere loan to the new subsidiary from the transferor for which the transferor received only a return of capital. In its affirmance of the District Court's decision in Wham, the Court of Appeals reasoned that where there was but one transferor and where the transferee corporation had no assets other than those derived from the transferor, it found it difficult to conceive of a concept wherein the transferor, as a result of the transaction, received anything which it did not have prior to the incorporation. However, the facts indicate that there was indisputably no borrowing from a bank by the new subsidiary, nor was there any loan from the transferor to the new subsidiary subsequent to the incorporation of the new subsidiary. The Court of Appeals also ignored the fact that prior to the incorporation of the new subsidiary there was no debt owned by it to the transferor.

Consequently, the Internal Revenue Service will not follow the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in Wham.

HOLDING

X did receive "other property" in the form of the 100*x* dollar account receivable and, pursuant to section 351(b) of the Code, must recognize gain in that amount.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND INFORMATION

Section 401(a)(4) of the Code provides that contributions or benefits under the plan shall not discriminate in favor of employees who are officers, shareholders or highly compensated.

Section 411(d)(2) and (d)(3) of the Code provides certain vesting standards regarding prohibited discrimination, which are also qualification standards, in the event of plan termination.

Section 1.401-4(c) of the Income Tax Regulations provides restrictions on the distribution of assets for certain employees in the event of early termination of the plan. Section 1.401-4(c)(1) of the regulations provides that the Commissioner may determine that such restrictions are not necessary to prevent prohibited discrimination in the event of an early plan termination.

Section 4044(a) of Title IV of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1, sets forth the rules applicable to the allocation of assets to participants and beneficiaries by priority categories in the event of the termination of a defined benefit plan.

Under section 4044(b)(4) of ERISA and section 1.411(d)-2(a)(2)(ii) of the regulations, assets that would otherwise be allocated pursuant to paragraphs (4)(B), (5) and (6) of section 4044(a) of ERISA may be required to be reallocated to the extent necessary to avoid discrimination within the meaning of section 401(a)(4) of the Code. Further, section 1.411(d)-2(e) of the regulations provides that assets in excess of the early termination limits may be reallocated to avoid discrimination.

SEC. 3. ASSETS NOT LESS THAN PRESENT VALUE OF ACCRUED BENEFIT

In the case of a terminating plan in which the value of plan assets as of the date of termination is not less than the present value of all accrued benefits (whether or not nonforfeitable) as of such date, a distribution of assets to each participant equal to the present value of that participant's accrued benefit will not be discriminatory within the meaning of section 401(a)(4) of the Code if the formula for computing benefits as of the date of termniation would not be discriminatory had the plan not terminated. All present values and the value of plan assets are computed using assumptions that are acceptable to satisfy section 4044 of ERISA.

If the assets as of the date of termination exceed the present value of the accrued benefits (whether or not nonforfeitable) as of such date, the plan will not be considered discriminatory if such excess reverts to the employer or is applied to increase benefits in a nondiscriminatory manner. One method of applying the assets to increase benefits in a nondiscriminatory manner is to amend the plan to provide a new benefit structure such that (1) the benefit structure would not be discriminatory if the plan were not terminated and (2) the present value of the revised accrued benefits (whether or not nonforfeitable) as of the date of termination equals the value of plan assets, and to distribute assets equal to the present value of the revised accrued benefits. The new benefit structure must satisfy other requirements of the law such as sections 411(d)(6) and 415 of the Code.

The guidelines provided by this section may be applied whether or not the termination would otherwise invoke the early termination restrictions described in section 1.401-4(c) of the regulations.

The guidelines described in this section may be illustrated by the following examples:

EXAMPLE 1. A plan provides a benefit of 10% of the first $5,000 of compensation plus 47½% of compensation in excess of $5,000. Such plan satisfies the requirements of Rev. Rul. 71-446, 1971-2 C.B. 187, and is fully integrated. As of the date of termination the assets equal $100,000 and the present value of the accrued benefits (whether or not nonforfeitable) equals $80,000. The plan distributes the $100,000 by providing each participant with assets equal to 125% of the present value of such participant's accrued benefit (whether or not nonforfeitable).

Distributing assets equal to 125% of the present value of the accrued benefits is tantamount to amending the plan by multiplying each of the terms of the benefit formula by 125% and distributing the present value of the accrued benefits. The revised formula would be 12.5% of the first $5,000 of compensation plus 59.375% of compensation in excess of $5,000. The revised formula is discriminatory in an ongoing plan because the formula fails to integrate properly. (See Rev. Rul. 71-446.) Accordingly, such distribution is discriminatory.

EXAMPLE 2. The facts are the same as in Example 7 except that the distribution is revised as follows: By a separate actuarial computation it is determined that a nonintegrated increase in the benefit formula of 1% of all compensation would increase the present value of the accrued benefits by $4,000. The plan has surplus assets of $20,000 ($100,000 of assets as of the date of termination less $80,000, the present value of accrued benefits as of such date). Therefore, an increase of each of the terms of the benefit formula by 5% will produce a benefit formula that would be nondiscriminatory in an ongoing plan and whose present value of the accrued benefits (whether or not nonforfeitable) equals the value of plan assets. The benefit formula is therefore revised to provide 15% of the first $5,000 and 52½% of compensation in excess of $5,000, and assets equal to the revised present value of the accrued benefits may be distributed without causing discrimination.

SEC. 4. ASSETS LESS THAN PRESENT VALUE OF ACCRUED BENEFITS

.01 Applicability—This section applies to the termination of a defined benefit plan in which the value of plan assets as of the date of termination is less than the present value of all accrued benefits (whether or not nonforfeitable) as of such date whether or not the restrictions of section 1.401-4(c) of the regulations apply.

.02 General Rules—The following guidelines apply in testing for discrimination in the case of a plan described in subsection .01 with respect to which the benefit structure, if the plan were not terminated, would not be discriminatory under section 401 (a)(4) of the Code.

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (4), the assets of a plan are allocated in accordance with sections 4044(a)(1), (2), (3), and (4)(A) of ERISA.

(2) Subject to the requirements of paragraph (1), the assets shall be allocated, to the extent possible, so that the rank and file employees receive from the plan at least the same proportion of the present value of their accrued benefits (whether or not nonforfeitable) as employees who are officers, shareholders, or highly compensated.

(3) Notwithstanding any other paragraph, in the case of assets restricted by section 1.401-4(c) of the regulations, assets may be reallocated to the extent necessary to help satisfy paragraph (2).

(4) In the case of a plan establishing subclasses within the meaning of section 4044(b)(6) of ERISA, the assets within any paragraph of section 4044(a) of ERISA may be reallocated within such paragraph to the extent that such reallocation helps to satisfy paragraph (2).

(5) Subject to paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4), the assets shall be allocated in accordance with section 4044 (a)(4)(B), (5), and (6) of ERISA.

.03 Examples—The guidelines described in subsection .02 are illustrated by the following examples:

Example 1. A plan described in subsection .01 which provided benefits on an ongoing basis as of the date of termination that were not discriminatory within the meaning of section 401 (a)(4) of the Code, terminates. The plan has two employees: A, an officer of the company, and B, a rank and file employee. The value of plan assets as of the date of termination is $130,000 which would, without regard to this section, be allocated to the employees under section 4044(a) of ERISA as follows:

(3)	$120,000	0
(5)	10,000	0

The present value of A's and B's accrued benefit on the date of termination, whether or not nonforfeitable, is $240,000 and $60,000, respectively. The limits described in section 1.401-4 (c) of the regulations do not apply.

The proposed distribution described in section 4044(a) of ERISA would not satisfy section 4.02(2) of this revenue ruling because (1) employees who are officers, shareholders or highly compensated would receive 54% $\frac{($130{,}000)}{($240{,}000)}$ of the present value of their accrued benefit whether or not nonforfeitable and the rank and file employees would receive 0% and (2) there are assets in paragraphs (4)(B), (4) or (6) of section 4044(a) of ERISA to be reallocated to minimize the discrimination. The $10,000 allocated in paragraph (5) to A should be reallocated to B. A would then receive $120,000 (50% of the present value of his accrued benefits whether or not nonforfeitable) and B would receive $10,000 (16⅔% of the present value of his accrued benefits whether or not nonforfeitable). This distribution would be deemed nondiscriminatory because the assets have, in accordance with section 4.02(2) of this revenue ruling, been allocated to the extent possible to preclude discrimination.

Example 2. The facts are the same as in Example 1 except the early termination restrictions described in section 1.401-(4)(c) would limit the assets to be allocated to A to $100,000. It is proposed to distribute $120,000 to A and $10,000 to B.

The proposed distribution does not satisfy section 4.02(3) of this revenue ruling because (1) the assets allocated to officers, shareholders, and highly compensated are 50% of the present value of their accrued benefits and the assets allocated to the rank and file employees are 16⅔% of the present value of their accrued benefits and (2) there are assets that are restricted by section 1.401-4(c) of the regulations that may be allocated to preclude discrimination. If an additional $16,000 were allocated to B so that A would receive $104,000 (43⅓% of the present value of his accrued benefit) and B would receive $26,000 (43⅓% of the present value of his accrued benefit) the distribution would be nondiscriminatory even though A is receiving $104,000 and the limits described in section 1.401-4(c) would otherwise limit his benefits to $100,000.

Example 3. A plan described in subsection .01, which provides benefits on an ongoing basis that are not discriminatory within the meaning of section 401(a)(4) of the Code, is terminated. The plan has two employees: A, a shareholder employer whose benefits are not nonforfeitable, and B, a rank and file employee whose entire benefits are nonforfeitable. When the assets are allocated in accordance with section 4044(a) of ERISA only B receives an asset allocation. It is proposed to reallocate the assets to provide both A and B with the same proportion of the present value of their accrued benefits whether or not nonforfeitable.

The proposed reallocation is not permitted. Because the rank and file employees are receiving at least the same percentage of the present value of their accrued benefits as the employees who are officers, shareholders, or highly compensated, there is no discrimination within the meaning of section 401(a)(4) of the Code and no reallocation under section 4.02(2), (3), or (4) of this revenue ruling and section 4044(b)(4) of ERISA is permissible. The assets, in accordance with section 4.02(1) and (5) should be allocated in accordance with section 4044(a) of ERISA.

Bank; Comptroller of the Currency's semiannual assessment. A calendar year, accrual method bank may not accrue on December 31 the semiannual assessment that the bank is required to pay to the Comptroller of the Currency on or before January 31 for the 6-month period beginning January 1.

Rev. Rul. 80-230

ISSUE

May a bank that uses an accrual method of accounting on a calendar year basis accrue on December 31, 1978, the semiannual assessment required to be paid to the Comptroller of the Currency on or before January 31, 1979, for the 6-month period beginning January 1, 1979?

FACTS

The taxpayer, a bank subject to the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency, uses an accrual method of accounting for reporting its income on a calendar year basis.

The provisions of 12 U.S.C.A. section 482 (Supp. 1979), which governs the assessment of national banks by the Comptroller of the Currency, provides that:

> The expense of the examinations . . . shall be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency upon national banks in proportion to their assets or resources. The assessments may be made more frequently than annually at the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency. The annual rate of such assessment shall be the same for all national banks except that banks examined more frequently than twice in one calendar year shall, in addition, be assessed the expense of these additional examinations.

Section 8.2 (chapter 1 of Bank and Banking Regulations, 12 CFR section 8.2) provides that each national bank and each district bank shall pay to the Comptroller of the Currency on or before January 31 and July 31 of each year a semiannual assessment fee for the 6 month period beginning 30 days before each payment date. Each semiannual assessment is based upon the total assets shown in the bank's quarterly "Consolidated Report of Condition (Including Domestic and Foreign Subsidiaries)" most recently preceding the payment date. Each bank subject to the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency on the date of the second or fourth condition reports is subject to the full assessment for the next 6 month period without proration for any reason.

The semiannual assessment return for the first 6 months of 1979, based on the condition reports submitted for the fourth reporting period ending December 31, 1978, was prepared by the taxpayer and sent to the Comptroller of the Currency with the required payment on January 30, 1979.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1.461-1(a)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that under an accrual method of accounting, an expense is deductible for the taxable year in which all the events have occurred that determine the fact of the liability and the amount thereof can be determined with reasonable accuracy.

The semiannual assessment for the first 6 months of 1979 is based upon the total assets reported by the taxpayer on its Consolidated Report of Condition (Including Domestic and Foreign Subsidiaries), filed for the reporting period ending December 31, 1978. The semiannual assessment is not due and payable in 1978 even though the amount thereof can be determined with reasonable accuracy as of the last day of business in 1978.

Generally, under section 1.461-1(a)(2) of the regulations, all the events have occurred that determine the fact of the liability when (1) the event fixing the liability, whether that be the required performance or other event, occurs, or (2) payment therefore is due, whichever happens earliest. Although the semiannual assessment is based upon the December 31, 1978, report of condition, it is not payable until January 31, 1979, and is for the 6-month period beginning January 1, 1979. Thus, all the events that determine the fact of liability for this semiannual assessment occur as of January 1, 1979, and have not yet occurred as of December 31, 1978.

HOLDING

A bank that uses an accrual method of accounting for reporting its income on a calendar year basis may not accrue on December 31, 1978, the semiannual assessment required to be paid to the Comptroller of the Currency on or before January 31, 1979, for the 6-month period beginning January 1, 1979.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

On August 15, 1978, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under section 892 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (43 FR 36111). The amendments were proposed to clarify existing regulations which neither define the term "foreign government" nor establish the types of income excluded from gross income and exempted from taxation. The proposed amendments define a foreign government to include only integral parts and controlled entities of a foreign sovereign. The proposed amendments generally provide that income derived by a foreign government from commercial activities in the United States is not income of a foreign government for purposes of the exemption under section 892.

The proposed amendments in effect provide that if a foreign sovereign separately owns and controls an entity which is not an integral part and which does not constitute a "controlled entity", such an entity is taxed on all of its commercial and noncommercial income under appropriate Internal Revenue Code provisions. The amendments define the term "controlled entity", and in most respects the definition parallels the requirements of Rev. Rul. 75-298, 1975-2 C.B. 290, relating to certain organizations created by foreign governments that are eligible for the section 892 exemption.

The Federal Register published a notice of a public hearing on November 6, 1978 (43 FR 51648). The hearing was held on January 23, 1979.

After consideration of all relevant matters presented by interested persons regarding the proposed amendments, they are adopted as revised by this Treasury decision.

This document also reserves paragraph (c)(2)(i)(d) and (e) of § 1.892-1. These paragraphs will provide rules for determining whether loans or net leases are to be considered investments. A notice of proposed rulemaking is tbeing published contemporaneously with this Treasury decision setting forth those rules.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN INTEGRAL PARTS AND SEPARATE ENTITIES

Comments from the public questioned whether it was appropriate to draw a distinction between integral parts and separate entities of a foreign sovereign under § 1.892-1(b) for purposes of the definition of the term "foreign government". Section 1.892-1(b) is revised in the final regulations. The revision places less emphasis on both the form of the entity that exercises foreign governmental authority and the extent of its commercial activity in the United States.

PENSION PLANS

One comment suggested clarification of the treatment of pension plans for employees of a foreign government.

Final regulations adopt this suggestion and § 1.892-1(b)(4) provides that certain pension plans qualify for the section 892 exemption even though plan assets are segregated in a separate fund or trust.

EFFECTIVE DATE

Several comments suggested that the effective date be completely prospective. Final regulations adopt this suggestion but also provide retroactivity in cases where no adverse tax consequences arise. Rev. Rul. 75-298 will not apply if these regulations apply.

COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES

The definition of the term "commercial activities" has been revised. The proposed regulations provide that obtaining and holding net leases on property is a commercial activity. This proposed rule with respect to net leases on real property is withdrawn. A further notice of proposed rulemaking relating to these leases is being published contemporaneously with this Treasury decision.

The final regulations rely generally on the character of an activity, rather than on whether or not the income from the activity is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States, in determining that a particular activity is a commercial activity.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Jason R. Felton of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations in matters of both substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

After consideration of all relevant matters presented by interested persons regarding the proposed amendments to the regulations under section 892, the following amendments are hereby adopted:

Paragraph 1. Section 1.892-1 is amended as follows:

1. The title to § 1.892-1 is revised.

2. Paragraph (a) is deleted and in lieu thereof new paragraphs (a) through (h) are added.

3. Paragraphs (b)(1) and (2) are redesignated as paragraphs (a) and (b), respectively, of a new § 1.892-2. The amended § 1.892-1 and new § 1.892-2 read as follows:

§ 1.892-1 Income of foreign governments.

(a) Manner of taxing—(1) In general. Section 892 provides, in general, that the income of a foreign government from sources within the United States is excluded from gross income and exempt from taxation. Paragraph (b) of this section defines a foreign government. In particular it describes the extent to which either an integral part of a foreign sovereign or an entity created by a foreign sovereign will be treated as a foreign government for purposes of section 892. To the extent that income is derived by such an integral part or entity of a foreign sovereign which does not qualify as a foreign government as defined in paragraph (b) of this section, the income is subject to taxation in accordance with appropriate Internal Revenue Code provisions.

(2) Foreign government exemption. The income derived by an integral part or controlled entity of a foreign sovereign from investments in the United States in stocks, bonds, or other securities, owned by such integral part or controlled entity, or from interest on deposits in banks of moneys belonging to such integral part or controlled entity, or from any other investment source within the United States, is generally treated as income of a foreign government, which is not included in gross income and is exempt from taxation.

(3) Foreign government exemption not available. (i) Income derived by an integral part or controlled entity of a foreign sovereign from commercial activities in the United States is not income of a foreign government for purposes of the exemption from taxation provided in section 892. These amounts are included in income and taxed under appropriate Internal Revenue Code provisions.

(ii) Income derived by an entity created by a foreign sovereign that does not qualify as a controlled entity of the foreign sovereign under paragraph (b)(3) of this section is included in the gross income of the entity and taxed under appropriate Internal Revenue Code provisions.

(b) Foreign government defined—(1) Classes of a foreign government. For purposes of this section, a foreign government consists only of integral parts or controlled entities of a foreign sovereign to the extent not engaged in commercial activities in the United States.

(2) Integral part. An integral part of a foreign sovereign is any person, body of persons, organization, agency, bureau, fund, instrumentality, or other body, however designated, that constitutes a governing authority of a foreign country. The net earnings of the governing authority must be credited to its own account or to other accounts of the foreign sovereign, with no portion inuring to the benefit of any private person. It does not include any individual who is a sovereign, official, or administrator acting in a private or personal capacity.

(3) Controlled entity. An entity which is separate in form from a foreign sovereign or otherwise constitutes a separate juridical entity is a controlled entity if it satisfies the following requirements:

(i) It is wholly owned and controlled by a foreign sovereign directly or indirectly through one or more controlled entities;

(ii) It is organized under the laws of the foreign sovereign by which owned;

(iii) Its net earnings are credited to its own account or to other accounts of the foreign sovereign, with no portion of its income inuring to the benefit of any private person; and

(iv) Its assets vest in the foreign sovereign upon dissolution.

The term "controlled entity" does not include any entity owned and controlled by more than one foreign sovereign. Thus, a foreign financial organization organized and wholly owned and controlled by several foreign sovereigns to foster economic, financial, and technical cooperation between various foreign nations is not a controlled entity for purposes of this section.

(4) Pension trust. A pension trust established exclusively for employees, or former employees, of a foreign government is a controlled entity if it meets the following requirements:

(i) The funds that comprise the trust are managed by trustees who are employees of, or persons appointed by, the foreign government; and

(ii) The trust forming a part of the pension plan provides for definitely determinable benefits (defined benefit plan) so that it may be concluded that the income of the trust satisfies the obligations of the foreign government to participants under the plan, rather than inuring to the benefit of a private person.

(5) Political subdivision and transnational entity. The rules that apply to a foreign sovereign apply to political subdivisions of a foreign country and to transnational entities. A transnational entity is an organization created by more than one foreign sovereign that has broad powers over external and domestic affairs of all participating foreign countries stretching beyond economic subjects to those concerning legal relations and transcending state or political boundaries.

(c) Characteristization of activities—(1) Commercial activities. Except as provided in paragraph (c)(2) of this section, all activities conducted in the United States which are ordinarily conducted with a view towards the current or future production of income (whether or not such income is from sources within the United States) are commercial activities. For example, leases on real or personal property, other than holding lease described in paragraph (c)(2)(i) of this section, is a commercial activity.

(2) Activities that are not commercial.

(i) Investments. Investments in the United States in stocks (whether or not a controlling interest investment), bonds, or other securities, loans, net leases on real property, land which is not producing income (other than on its sale or from an investment in net leases on real property), or the holding of deposits in banks are not commercial activities. Consideration of all of the facts and circumstances will determine whether an activity with respect to property described in this paragraph (c)(2)(i) constitutes an investment. The following principles apply in making such a determination;

(a) An activity undertaken as a dealer will not be an investment for purposes of this paragraph (c)(2)(i).

(b) An activity will not cease to be an investment solely because of the volume of transactions of that activity or because of other unrelated activities.

(c) Except in the case of holding stock, an activity will not be an investment merely because the income derived from the activity is not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States. For example, a loan made by a bank, loan company, or similar financial business (open in the United States to the general public) does not constitute an investment.

(d) [RESERVED — Rules for loans]

(e) [RESERVED—Rules for net leases on real property]

(ii) Cultural events. Performances and exhibitions within the United States of amateur athletic events and events devoted to the promotion of the arts by cultural organizations are not commercial activities.

(iii) Purchasing. The mere purchase of goods in the United States for use of the foreign sovereign is not a commercial activity.

(iv) Activities other than trade or business. For purposes of this paragraph, a particular activity in the United States that does not constitute the conduct of a trade or business in the United States under section 864(b) will be deemed not to be a commercial activity. This paragraph (c)(2)(iv) does not apply if the activity in any year or period constitutes the conduct of a trade or business in the United States under section 864(b). This paragraph (c)(2)(iv) also does not apply to activities involving real property and leases of personal property.

(v) Not for profit. Activities that are not customarily attributable to or carried on by private enterprise for profit in the United States are not commercial activities. The fact that in some instances, Federal, State, or local governments of the United States also are engaged in the same or similar activity does not mean that the activity is one described in this paragraph (c)(2)(v). For example, even though the United States Government is engaged in the activity of operating a railroad, operating a railroad is not an activity described in this paragraph (c)(2)(v).

(d) Other operative sections. In determining whether income is from sources within or without the United States, see sections 861 through 863 and the regulations thereunder. For purposes of determining whether income is effectively connected with a trade or business, see section 864(c) and the regulations thereunder. For rules with respect to withholding of tax at source, see sections 1441 and 1442 and the regulations thereunder. For rules with respect to methods of accounting and accounting periods, see sections 446 and 441, respectively, and the regulations thereunder.

(e) Filing of returns. A return with respect to income taxes under subtitle A shall be made by a foreign sovereign, controlled entity, political subdivision, or a transnational entity with respect to certain amounts included in gross income. See section 6012.

(f) Relationship of section 892 to certain Code sections—(1) Section 893. The term "foreign government" referred to in section 893 (relating to the exemption for compensation of employees of foreign governments) has the same meaning as given such term in paragraph (b) of this section.

(2) Section 895. A foreign central bank of issue (as defined in § 1.895-1(b)) that fails to qualify for the exemption from tax provided by this section may nevertheless be exempt from tax on the items of income described in section 895. Thus, a foreign central bank of issue that is not wholly owned and controlled by a foreign sovereign, although not qualifying for exemption under this section, may be exempt under section 895 on the items of income enumerated in that section.

(3) Section 883(b). Section 892 and this section do not limit the exemption provided under section 883 (b), relating generally to the exemption of earnings derived by foreign participants from the ownership or operation of communications satellite systems.

(4) Section 1442. No withholding is required under sections 1441 and 1442 in the case of income exempt from taxation and not included in gross income under paragraph (a)(2) of this section.

(g) Illustrations. This section may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). For 1981, the Office of the President of a foreign country makes investments of funds from the foreign sovereign's treasury in publicly traded stocks, bonds, and other securities, and interest bearing bank deposits. The Office of the President has also purchased in 1981 a hotel in the United States which is operated by a U.S. agent. None of the income from all of these activities inures to the benefit of the President (or any other official of the foreign country) in a private or personal capacity. The sovereign's investment activities do not constitute commercial activities under paragraph (c) of this section because the foreign sovereign has made investments in property described in paragraph (c)(2)(i) of this section. Income from these investments is exempt under paragraph (a)(2) of this section. Income derived from the operation of the hotel is subject to tax since the Office of the President is engaged in commercial activities in the United States by reason of its hotel operations and hence the income therefrom is not income of a foreign government under paragraph (a)(3)(i) of this section. By reason of section 864(c)(3) and § 1.864-4(b), this income is effectively connected for 1981 with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States by the Office of the President and is taxed under section 882.

Example (2). Pursuant to a general agreement on contracts, exchanges, and cooperation between the United States and a foreign country, the State Concert Bureau, a bureau of a foreign sovereign, entered into four separate contracts to be performed in 1981 with a U.S. corporation engaged in the business of promoting international cultural programs. Under the first contract, the State Concert Bureau agreed to send a singer and accompanists on tour for 3 weeks in the United States. Under the second contract, the Bureau agreed to send a conductor on tour for 4 weeks in the United States. Under the third contract, the Bureau agreed to send the State ensemble of folk dance on tour for 5 weeks in the United States. Under the fourth contract, the Bureau agreed to send the State ballet and opera troupe on tour for 6 weeks in the United States. The State Concert Bureau received approximately $80,000 from the performances and from the sale of programs from the tours. This income is exempt from taxation under paragraph (a)(2) of this section since the activities of the Bureau are not commercial activities under paragraph (c)(2)(ii) of this section. Although the performances themselves do not constitute commercial activities, they do constitute the conduct of a trade or business in the United States. As a result, income derived by the State Concert Bureau from sources within the United States from the tour groups' United States radio or television appearances, or from motion picture productions or record and tape recordings of United States performances does not qualify for the exclusion from commercial activities contained in paragraph (c)(2) of this section.

Example (3). In 1981, the Ministry of Culture of foreign country X enters into certain agreements with a U.S. corporation for the television broadcast in the United States of performances by the State ballet troupe during 1981. These performances occur in foreign country X. During 1981, the Ministry of Culture receives $300,000 in royalties and other fees under the terms of the agreement. Since the performances take place outside the United States, and since the activities are not commercial activities under paragraph (c)(2)(iv) of this section, the income from the performances is income of a foreign government and is exempt from taxation under paragraph (a)(2) of this section.

Example (4). (a) In 1981, foreign sovereign Y organizes under its law M Corp. as a wholly owned and controlled government corporation under the auspices of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. M Corp. engages in the purchasing in the United States of grain and other agricultural goods for free distribution to the poor in country Y. In addition, when purchases of grain exceed demand in foreign country Y (which rarely occurs), M Corp. engages in the sale of grain in the United States. M Corp. also engages in the trading of commodities futures (not for its own account) through a resident broker. Foreign sovereign Y and M Corp. do not have an office or other fixed place of business in the United States through which or by the direction of which the transactions in commodities futures are effected. The purchasing and trading activities of M Corp. are not commercial activities under paragraph (c) of this section. M Corp. is a controlled entity under paragraph (b)(3) of this section. Income from these activities derived by M Corp. from sources within the United States is exempt from taxation under paragraph (a)(2) of this section. However, income derived by M Corp. from the sale of grain in the United States is a commercial activity under paragraph (c) of this section unless M Corp. is not engaged in a trade or business in the United States with respect to its sales activities (paragraph (c)(2)(iv) of this section).

(b) The facts are the same as in example (4)(a), except that in 1982, M Corp. opens an office in Washington, D.C., through which transactions of trading in commodities futures in the United States are effected. These activities are commercial activities under paragraph (c)(1) of this section since M Corp. is now considered to be engaged in a trade or business in the United States under section 864. Thus, paragraph (c)(2)(iv) of this section does not apply. Income from these trading activities is not income of a foreign government under paragraph (a)(3)(i) of this section.

(h) Effective date. This section applies to income derived by a foreign sovereign after July 22, 1980, unless the sovereign elects to have it apply to income derived before that date.

Section 902.—Credit for Corporate Stockholder in Foreign Corporation

26 CFR 1.902-1: Credit for domestic corporate shareholder of a foreign corporation.
(Also Section 482; 1.482-1.)

Foreign tax credit; allocation of income to domestic parent; tax deemed paid. The effect of a reduction in the amount of foreign income tax paid by a foreign subsidiary following an allocation of income under section 482 of the Code on the computation of its domestic parent corporation's deemed paid foreign tax credit under section 902 is discussed; Rev. Rul. 76-508 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-231

ISSUE

How does the reduction in the amount of foreign income tax paid by a foreign subsidiary following an allocation of income under section 482 of the Internal Revenue Code affect the computation of its domestic parent corporation's deemed paid foreign tax credit under section 902 of the Code in the circumstances described below?

FACTS

P, a domestic corporation, owns all of the voting stock of S, a foreign corporation organized under the laws of foreign country Z. Country Z does not have an income tax convention in force with the United States. P and S use the accrual method of accounting.

In 1977, P sold its products to S at a price below P's normal charge to unrelated customers, so that P did not realize its normal profit. The Internal Revenue Service proposed an allocation of income under section 482 of the Code for 1977 to reflect an arm's length selling price. For 1977, S paid an 80*x* country Z income tax on reported income of 200*x*. Pursuant to the allocation of income under section 482, the Internal Revenue Service reduced S's country Z income by 20*x* and increased P's income by the same amount.

P received a dividend of 15*x* from S during 1977 out of S's 1977 accumulated profits and claimed a deemed paid foreign tax credit under section 902 of the Code based on the amount of country Z taxes paid by S in 1977 before the income allocation. The 15*x* dividend was not excluded from P's income under Rev. Proc. 65-17, 1965-1 C.B. 833, and P has not elected to compute S's earnings and profits under section 964 of the Code.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

The applicable sections of the Code are 901 and 902. Subject to certain limitations, section 901 permits domestic corporations to claim a credit for income taxes paid or accrued to foreign countries. Under section 902, a domestic corporation owning at least 10 percent of the voting stock of a foreign corporation from which it receives dividends shall be deemed to have paid a specified portion of any creditable income tax paid or deemed paid to any foreign country on or with respect to the accumulated profits of such foreign corporation. The specified portion is in the ratio that the dividends bear to accumulated profits in excess of foreign income taxes.

Section 1.902-1(e)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations provides, in part, that the accumulated profits for any taxable year of a first-tier foreign corporation shall be the sum of the earnings and profits of such corporation for such year, and the foreign income taxes imposed on or with respect to the gains, profits, and income to which such earnings and profits are attributable.

United States principles for computing earnings and profits, not foreign principles, are used to determine the computation of accumulated profits for purposes of section 902. See H.H. Robertson Co. v. Commissioner, 59 T.C. 53, 78-79 (1972), aff'd without opinion, 500 F.2d 1399 (3d Cir. 1974); Untermyer v. Commissioner, 24 B.T.A. 906 (1931), aff'd per curiam, 59 F.2d 1004 (2d Cir. 1932), XII-1 C.B. 157 (1933), cert. denied, 287 U.S. 647 (1932). Accumulated profits under section 902 are determined on an annual basis. H.H. Robertson Co. v. Commissioner, at 78-79.

Foreign income taxes are generally attributed to a particular year in which such taxes are paid or accrued on or with respect to the foreign corporation's accumulated profits, pursuant to section 1.902-1(f) of the regulations.

Rev. Rul. 76-508, 1976-2 C.B. 225, concerns the allocation of income from a foreign subsidiary corporation to its domestic parent under section 482 of the Code. Rev. Rul. 76-508 holds that in such a case the Service can reduce the amount of foreign income taxes paid by the foreign subsidiary that qualify for use by the parent in computing the deemed paid foreign tax credit under section 902.

Under the facts of Rev. Rul. 76-508, the amount of foreign income taxes paid for purposes of section 902 of the Code is reduced because it is presumed that an amount has been paid to the foreign country that exceeds the amount required to be paid pursuant to such country's law and that the amount of the non-required or voluntary overpayment will be refunded. (The word "contribution" as used with respect to overpayments of foreign taxes in Rev. Rul. 76-508 means a voluntary overpayment to the foreign country.)

Generally, for domestic corporations, the earnings and profits of an accrual method taxpayer for a given year are reduced by the amount of tax accrued. A subsequent tax refund increases earnings and profits for that given year, regardless of the year in which such refund is received. See Sweets Company of America v. Commissioner, 8 T.C. 1104, 1106 (1947), which indicates that adjustments to earnings and profits on account of mistaken or erroneous overpayments or underpayments of tax for prior years are made as of the years for which the tax was due (accrued).

Thus, a reduction in the amount of foreign income taxes accrued by the amount of a voluntary overpayment, in conjunction with the presumption that the overpayment will be refunded, has an effect on the foreign subsidiary's earnings and profits in the earlier year of accrual of the foreign tax liability. Voluntary overpayments that the foreign corporation has treated as a tax expense item must be treated as a reduction of tax expense in such earlier year. This will increase earnings and profits in excess of foreign income taxes in such earlier year by the amount of the overpayment that it is presumed will be refunded.

When the foreign country actually refunds the voluntary overpayment there is no effect on the earnings and profits or accumulated profits in excess of foreign income taxes (except for exchange rate differentials in certain situations) because the adjustment (increase) to earnings and profits and accumulated profits in excess of foreign income taxes has already taken place.

If it is established to the satisfaction of the Internal Revenue Service that under the provisions of the law of country Z, S did not pay an amount in excess of that required by such law, or P and S exhaust all effective and practical remedies and the foreign country does not refund the voluntary overpayment, the refund presumption will be rebutted and the amount of the voluntary overpayment will be treated as a tax expense item in the original year of S's accrual of the foreign tax liability. S's earnings and profits will then be reduced in the original year of S's accrual of the foreign tax liability by the amount of the tax expense that is not refunded. If an income tax convention were in force between the United States and country Z, all effective and practical remedies would include requesting consideration of the matter by the United States competent authority.

If P and S fail to pursue all effective and practical remedies and do not establish that S has made payments as required by the law of country Z, and it is established that S cannot receive a refund of the voluntary overpayment (for example, because the statute of limitations has expired), the amount of foreign income taxes paid, as reduced because of the refund presumption, will not be increased by the amount of the voluntary overpayment.

Moreover, even if P and S exhaust all effective and practical remedies and country Z refuses to refund the voluntary overpayment, the amount of the foreign income taxes paid, as reduced by the refund presumption, will not be increased by the amount of the voluntary overpayment in certain egregious cases, such as where it is clear that P and S knew or should have known that, under the law of country Z, S would not have had to make the voluntary overpayment because P grossly underpriced its products by selling them to S at substantially below cost and the law of country Z provides for arm's length pricing in computing tax liability. Thus, in such a case the amount of foreign income taxes paid will not be increased by the amount of the voluntary overpayment even after the foreign taxing authority and courts refuse for procedural reasons to grant any income tax refund based on increasing the price paid from S to P pursuant to an appropriate section 482 arm's length allocation by the Service.

In cases where there is a failure to exhaust remedies and in the aforementioned egregious cases, where the foreign income taxes paid (as reduced by the refund presumption) will not be increased by the voluntary overpayment, earnings and profits will be reduced by the amount of the overpayment, but only for the subsequent year when the right to the refund becomes worthless—for example, for the year in which the foreign statute of limitations for such a refund expires. See Schweppe v. Commissioner, 8 T.C. 1224 (1947), aff'd, 168 F.2d 284 (9th Cir. 1948), regarding the adjustment to earnings and profits in the year an otherwise valid debt becomes worthless because of the expiration of the statute of limitations; and Sweets Company of America, which distinguishes for earnings and profits adjustment purposes a mistake situation (such as the deemed rebutted refund presumption) from a subsequent event situation (such as the expiration of the statute of limitations).

HOLDING

The reduction, pursuant to Rev. Rul. 76-508, in the amount of foreign income tax paid by a foreign subsidiary following an allocation of income under section 482 of the Code affects the computation of its domestic parent's section 902 deemed paid foreign tax credit in the following manner:

	Accumulated Profits (as defined in section 902(c)(1))	Foreign Income Taxes Paid	Accumulated Profits (—) Foreign Income Taxes Paid	Dividend	902 Credit	(subject to section 904 limitation)
Year 1 before 482 allocation	200	80	120	15	$\frac{15}{120} \times$	80 = 10
Year 1 after 482 allocation of 20	180	72	108	15	$\frac{15}{108} \times$	72 = 10
Year 1 after a refund of the overpayment is obtained	180	72	108	15	$\frac{15}{108} \times$	72 = 10
Year 1 after exhaustion of administrative remedies and foreign government does not refund overpayment	180[1]	80[1]	100[1]	15	$\frac{15}{100} \times$	80 = 12[1]
Year 1 after failure to exhaust administrative remedies and taxpayer establishes no refund can be obtained (foreign statute of limitations runs in year 4)	180[2]	72[2]	108[2]	15	$\frac{15}{108} \times$	72 = 10

[1] In those situations in which taxpayer knew or should have known that it was not liable for overpayment of 8, foreign taxes paid will remain at 72 and accumulated profits will remain at 180 resulting in a 902 credit of 10; however, accumulated profits in the year that the statute of limitations runs, year 4, will be reduced by the overpayment of 8.

[2] Foreign income taxes paid remain at 72 on the assumption that had the taxpayer pursued its administrative remedies a refund of 8 would have been received; accumulated profits of the year that the statute of limitations runs, year 4, will be reduced by the overpayment of 8.

Rev. Rul. 80-232

ISSUE

For purposes of computing the manufacturers excise tax on sales of truck trailers, can certain discounts and allowances be taken into account in determining the lowest price at which a distributor, a member of the same affiliated group of corporations as the manufacturer, regularly sells trailers to independent retailers?

FACTS

The manufacturer sells all its truck trailers to the distributor. The distributor offers and regularly allows the following discounts to its customers: (1) a 1 percent discount from the list price for payment within 15 days; (2) a 2 percent discount on all sales to an authorized stocking dealer; and (3) a 1 to 4 percent discount based on the cumulative volume of purchases by an authorized stocking dealer during the year.

To be a stocking dealer, rather than a non-stocking dealer, a dealer must (1) have adequate facilities and personnel to properly displace and service trailers, (2) be in compliance with state regulations governing the sale and registration of trailers and furnish information satisfactory to the distributor for use in establishing credit, (3) not be a stocking dealer for any other line of trailer considered by the manufacturer to be competitive, and (4) stock the manufacturer's trailers at a quantity satisfactory to the manufacturer.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4061(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code imposes a manufacturers excise tax on truck trailers.

Section 4216(b)(5) of the Code provides that if the manufacturer of a trailer regularly sells such article to a distributor that is a member of the same affiliated group (as defined in section 1504(a)) as the manufacturer, and such distributor regularly sells such article to one or more independent retailers, the constructive sale price of such article shall be 98½ percent of the lowest price for which such distributor regularly sells such article in arm's length transactions to independent retailers.

Section 48.4216(b)-4(f)(1)(i) of the Manufacturers and Retailers Excise Tax Regulations provides that a lowest price shall be determined without requiring that a given percentage of sales be made at that price (provided that the volume of sales made at that price is great enough to indicate that those sales have not been engaged in primarily to establish a lower tax base).

Discounts of the type given in this case, when regularly given by a distributor to a dealer, are properly to be considered in determining the "lowest price" under section 4216(b)(5) of the Code. The fact that a particular discount is offered, in and of itself, is not sufficient.

HOLDING

The discounts and allowances may be taken into account in determining the lowest price at which the distributor regularly sells truck trailers to independent retailers. The maximum percentage volume discount that can be used in the computation is the maximum volume discount at which sales are regularly made. If, for example, the distributor regularly allows the 1 percent early payment discount, the 2 percent authorized stocking dealer discount, and a 3 percent volume discount, but only occasionally makes a sale large enough to qualify for the 4 percent volume discount, the "lowest price" is list price minus the sum of the 1 percent early payment discount, the 2 percent authorized stocking dealer discount and the 3 percent volume discount, that is, list price minus 6 percent.

THREE-MONTH EXTENSION OF THE TAXES WHICH ARE TRANSFERRED TO THE AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND

JUNE 5, 1980.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ULLMAN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report to accompany H.R. 7477.[1]

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 7477) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide a 3-month extension of the taxes which are transferred to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment—stated in terms of the page and line numbers of the introduced bill—is as follows:

(3) POSTPONEMENT OF DUE DATE FOR FILING RETURN.—The due date for filing any return of the tax imposed by section 4491 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to any use after June 30, 1980, shall not be earlier than October 31, 1980.

I. SUMMARY

Under present law, the aviation-related excise taxes now transferred to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund are scheduled either to expire or be reduced on July 1, 1980.

The bill extends the present law aviation excise taxes at their present rate structure for a 3-month period, July 1, 1980-September 30, 1980, in order to provide additional time for the Congress to complete its consideration of the trust fund extension legislation. The Committee on Ways and Means has approved an amendment for a 5-year extension of the trust fund which will be offered as a separate title to H.R. 6721. The bill, H.R. 7477, also extends the transfer of the aviation excise tax revenues to the trust fund for the same 3-month period. In addition, the bill provides that the due date for filing a return for payment of the aircraft use tax for the 3-month period will not be earlier than October 31, 1980.

[2] II. EXPLANATION OF BILL

Present law

Under present law, the aviation-related excise taxes now transferred to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund are scheduled either to expire or be reduced on July 1, 1980. The following table shows the present law aviation excise taxes and the rates scheduled for July 1, 1980, under present law.

[1] The tax does not apply to aircraft, owned by a tax-exempt aircraft museum defined in sec. 404(h), which are operated exclusively for the procurement, care, and exhibition of World War II aircraft.

[2] A tax of two parts: (1) $25 annual per plane registration tax, plus (2) a weight tax of 3½ cents per pound for turbine-powered (jet) aircraft and 2 cents per pound for nonturbine-powered aircraft for each pound in excess of 2,500 pounds of "maximum certificated takeoff weight."

[3] Taxed at the general rates for nonhighway tires (5 cents per pound) and tubes (10 cents per pound) under Code sec. 4071.

[4] Tax on gasoline fuel only. As of July 1, 1980, the additional 3-cents-per-gallon tax on gasoline used in noncommercial aviation aircraft would expire, and the 7-cents-per-gallon tax on non-gasoline fuels (e.g. kerosene—jet fuel) would also expire.

Ways and Means Committee amendment to H.R. 6721

On May 28, 1980, the Ways and Means Committee approved an amendment, which is to be offered as a separate title to H.R. 6721 (the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1980), as reported by the Public Works and Transportation Committee and the Science and Technology Committee.

The Ways and Means Committee amendment generally extends the Airport and Airway Trust Fund and the aviation excise taxes transferred to the trust fund through September 30, 1985 (fiscal year 1985). However, certain modifications were made to the aviation taxes: (1) the air passenger ticket tax was extended at 8 percent through September 30, 1982, with a reduction to 5 percent on October 1, 1982; (2) the [3] aircraft use tax was repealed for noncommercial aircraft (i.e., allowed to expire on July 1, 1980), while the use tax on commercial aircraft was extended through September 30, 1985; (3) the fuels tax on noncommercial aviation was increased to 8½ cents per gallon on July 1, 1980 through September 30, 1985, and (4) other amendments were made relating to the 225-mile zone rule for air transportation between the United States, and Canada, and Mexico, the treatment of international uninterrupted flights, and the manner in which airline tickets must show the air fare and the ticket tax.

Reasons for change

The committee concluded that the present law aviation excise taxes should be extended at their present rates for the 3-month period, July 1, 1980-September 30, 1980, in order to provide additional time for orderly Congressional consideration of H.R. 6721. If present law is not extended, the 8-percent air passenger ticket tax will drop to 5 percent on July 1, and the revenues will go into the general fund. Also, the 5-percent waybill tax, the $3 departure tax, and the aircraft use tax will expire on July 1. In addition, the fuels tax on noncommercial aviation jet fuel will expire, and the tax on noncommercial aviation gasoline will drop to 4 cents per gallon. In view of the closeness of the July 1 date, the committee believes that expeditious Congressional action is necessary for a short-term extension of the present law tax rates so that there is some certainty as to the applicable tax rates for the coming months while the Congress considers the extension of the trust fund authorizations.

Explanation of provision

The bill extends the present law aviation taxes at the present tax rates for a 3-month period, or July 1, 1980-September 30, 1980. For purposes of the aircraft use tax, the bill treats the 3-month period as a taxable year at one-fourth the annual tax rate now imposed.[1] (i.e., the $25 annual per plane tax will be $6.25, and the respective weight taxes on jet and non-jet aircraft will be at one-fourth the present tax rates.) Also, the bill provides that the due date for filing a return for the aircraft use tax for the period beginning after June 30, 1980, will not be due earlier than October 31, 1980.

In addition, the bill extends for the 3-month period the transfer of the aviation excise tax revenues to the Airport and Airway Trust Fund.

Effective date

The provisions of the bill are generally effective for the 3-month period July 1, 1980-September 30, 1980. The amendment with respect to the time of filing a return for payment of the aircraft use tax for the 3-month period provides that the due date for such a return will not be earlier than October 31, 1980.

[1] Under Code section 4491, the taxable year for purposes of the annual aircraft use tax presently is July 1-June 30, with the use tax being imposed (on a prorated basis for the weight portion of the tax) on an aircraft in the month the plane is first used. Payment of the use tax is due generally by the end of the month following the month of first use.

Announcement 80-108

The General Assistance Program of the State of New Jersey has been designated by the Department of Health and Human Services as a qualified general assistance program. Participants in this program qualify as members of a targeted group for the targeted jobs credit allowed employers under section 44B of the Internal Revenue Code.

Form 6177, General Assistance Program Determination, has been revised (July, 1980) to include the New Jersey program on its list of qualified general assistance programs. The revised form is now available. Since Form 6177 does not have to be filed for programs on this list, it is no longer required for the New Jersey General Assistance Program. However, Form 6177 must be filed for any other program not specifically included on the list.

Announcement of the Disbarment, Suspension, or Consent to Voluntary Suspension of Attorneys, Certified Public Accountants, Enrolled Agents and Enrolled Actuaries from Practice before the Internal Revenue Service

Under 31 Code of Federal Regulations, Part 10, an attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary, in order to avoid the institution or conclusion of a proceeding for his disbarment or suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service, may offer his consent to suspension from such practice. The Director of Practice, in his discretion, may suspend an attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary in accordance with the consent offered.

This announcement will appear in the weekly Bulletin at the earliest practicable date after such action and will continue to appear in the weekly Bulletins for five successive weeks or for as many weeks as is practicable for each attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary so suspended and will later be consolidated and published in the Cumulative Bulletin.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Rev. Rul. 80-233, page 6.

Charitable contributions; fair market value; bibles. A taxpayer purchased bibles from a promoter who asserted that they could be purchased at a considerable discount from "retail" price and claimed that if the taxpayer held the bibles over twelve months and then contributed them to a charitable organization, the taxpayer would be entitled to deduct the "retail" price as a charitable contribution. The charitable deduction is based on the fair market value of the bibles at the time of contribution, and the best evidence of the fair market value at that time is the price at which similar lots of bibles are being sold to others.

Rev. Rul. 80-234, page 6.

Partner; receipt of guaranteed payment; capitalized by partnership. A guaranteed payment, within the meaning of section 707(c) of the Code, that is received by a partner as a finder's fee, is includible in the partner's gross income in the year of receipt, even though the partnership must capitalize and amortize the expense.

Rev. Rul. 80-235, page 7.

Basis; synthetic oil converter purchased for nonrecourse note; partnership. The liability created by an interest-bearing nonrecourse note given by a limited partnership as the total purchase price for a synthetic oil converter and payable out of the partnership's net cash flow may not be included in the partnership's basis in the converter for purposes of investment tax credits. The liability created by a limited partner's written obligation given as part of the purchase price for a partnership interest and payable only from cash distributions from the production activities of the partnership may not be included in the basis of the limited partnership interest.

Small business corporation; net operating loss; research and development agreement. Shareholders contributed cash to a small business corporation in exchange for stock, which was used as security to borrow, through nonrecourse notes, most of the cash contributed. The lender simultaneously sold the notes at face value to a research and development company that was hired by the small business corporation. For purposes of determining the limitation on a shareholder's net operating loss under section 1374(c) of the Code, the cash proceeds of a nonrecourse loan are not part of the basis of the stock received in exchange for such cash, because the various related steps of the financing arrangement are collapsed to show that no cash was actually advanced under the nonrecourse note.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Prices: Domestic—$2.00 a single copy, $55.00 a year subscription; Foreign—$2.50 a single copy, $68.75 a year subscription.

Announcement Relating to Decisions of the Tax Court

It is the policy of the Internal Revenue Service to announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin at the earliest practicable date the determination of the Commissioner to acquiesce or not acquiesce in a decision of the Tax Court which disallows a deficiency in tax determined by the Commissioner to be due.

Notice that the Commissioner has acquiesced or nonacquiesced in a decision of the Tax Court relates only to the issue or issues decided adversely to the Government.

Actions of acquiescences in adverse decisions shall be relied on by Revenue officers and others concerned as conclusions of the Service only to the application of the law to the facts in the particular case. Caution should be exercised in extending the application of the decision to a similar case unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, and consideration should be given to the effect of new legislation, regulations, and rulings as well as subsequent court decisions and actions thereon.

Acquiescence in a decision means acceptance by the Service of the conclusion reached, and does not necessarily mean acceptance and approval of any or all of the reasons assigned by the Court for its conclusions.

No announcements are made in the Bulletin with respect to memorandum opinions of the Tax Court.

The announcements published in the weekly Internal Revenue Bulletins are consolidated semiannually and annually. The semiannual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for July and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the first half of the year and the annual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for the following January and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the last half of the year.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 38.—Investment in Certain Depreciable Property

26 CFR 1.38-1: Investment in certain depreciable property.

Whether the liability created by a note given as the purchase price for a synthetic oil converter is included in the partnership's basis in the converter for purposes of the investment tax credits. See Rev. Rul. 80-235, page 7.

Section 46.—Amount of Credit

26 CFR 1.46-1: Determination of amount.

Whether the liability created by a note given as the purchase price for a synthetic oil converter is included in the partnership's basis in the converter for purposes of the investment tax credits. See Rev. Rul. 80-235, page 7.

Section 48.—Definitions; Special Rules

26 CFR 1.48-1: Definition of section 38 property.

Whether the liability created by a note given as the purchase price for a synthetic oil converter is included in the partnership's basis in the converter for purposes of the investment tax credits. See Rev. Rul. 80-235, page 7.

Section 170.—Charitable, Etc., Contributions and Gifts

26 CFR 1.170A-1: Charitable, etc., contributions and gifts; allowance of deduction.

Charitable contributions; fair market value; bibles. A taxpayer purchased bibles from a promoter who asserted that they could be purchased at a considerable discount from "retail" price and claimed that if the taxpayer held the bibles over twelve months and then contributed them to a charitable organization, the taxpayer would be entitled to deduct the "retail" price as a charitable contribution. The charitable deduction is based on the fair market value of the bibles at the time of contribution, and the best evidence of the fair market value at that time is the price at which similar lots of bibles are being sold to others.

Rev. Rul. 80-233

ISSUE

What is the fair market value of bibles that are contributed to charity under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

P is a promoter who sells bibles to individuals. P advises potential customers that they can purchase bibles at a considerable discount from "retail" price, hold the bibles for 12 months, and then, by donating them to a qualified charitable organization, claim a charitable deduction for the "retail" price.

In 1979 D purchased from P 500 copies of a single edition of a modern translation of the bible for a total of 100*x* dollars. Upon receipt of D's payment of 100*x* dollars, P furnished D with a statement that the 500 copies of the bible had a total retail value of 300*x* dollars.

As part of the purchase agreement, P agreed to periodically furnish D with lists of religious organizations that were interested in receiving a donation of bibles and for which the use of the books would be related to the organizations' exempt purposes. Pursuant to P's suggestion that only one organization be the recipient of the bibles, D selected from the list, X, an organization described in section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code, to be the recipient. At D's direction, P mailed the bibles directly to X 13 months after D had purchased them from P. At the time D contributed the bibles to X, wholesale dealers of bibles were selling similar lots of bibles to members of the general public for 100*x* dollars.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 170 of the Code provides, subject to certain limitations, a deduction for contributions and gifts to or for the use of organizations described in section 170(c), payment of which is made within the taxable year.

Section 1.170A-1(c)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that if a charitable contribution is made in property other than money, the amount of the contribution is the fair market value of the property at the time of the contribution reduced as provided in section 170(e)(1) of the Code and section 1.170A-4(a) of the regulations.

Section 1.170A-1(c)(2) of the regulations provides, in part, that fair market value is the price at which property would change hands between a willing buyer and a willing seller, neither being under any compulsion to buy or sell and both having reasonable knowledge of relevant facts.

To determine fair market value, reference is made to the most active and comparable marketplace at the time of the donor's contribution. The most probative evidence of fair market is the prices at which similar quantities of bibles are sold in arm's-length transactions. See Rev. Rul. 80-69, 1980-11 I.R.B. 5. The 100*x* dollars, at which similar lots of bibles were sold to D and are still being sold to others, is the best evidence of fair market value at the time the bibles are contributed to X.

HOLDING

The fair market value of the bibles contributed to X is 100*x* dollars.

Section 707.—Transactions Between Partner and Partnership

26 CFR 1.707-1: Transactions between partner and partnership.

Partner; receipt of guaranteed payment; capitalized by partnership. A guaranteed payment, within the meaning of section 707(c) of the Code, that is received by a partner as a finder's fee, is includible in the partner's gross income in the year of receipt, even though the partnership must capitalize and amortize the expense.

Rev. Rul. 80-234

ISSUE

Is the full amount of a guaranteed payment under section 707(c) of the Internal Revenue Code includible in the gross income of a partner in the year of receipt, under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

A is a partner in partnership X. In 1979, pursuant to an agreement between A and X, A received 500*x* dollars as a "finder's fee" for obtaining acceptable applicants for loans. The finder's fee is a part of the acquisition cost of the loans that must be capitalized and amortized over the lives of the loans made to the applicants. See Rev. Rul. 57-400, 1957-2 C.B. 520. A included in gross income for 1979, an amount equal to that amount of the expense amortized by X in 1979. X reports its income on a calendar year basis.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 707(c) of the Code provides that to the extent determined without regard to the income of the partnership, payments to a partner for services or the use of capital shall be considered as made to one who is not a member of the partnership, but only for the purposes of section 61(a) (relating to gross income) and, subject to section 263, for purposes of section 162(a) (relating to trade or business expenses).

Section 1.707-1(c) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a partner must include such payments as ordinary income for the partner's taxable year within or with which ends the partnership taxable year in which the partnership deducted such payments as paid or accrued under its method of accounting. The partnership must capitalize the expenditure and is recovering the cost through amortization over the life of the asset. A is relying on section 1.707-1(c) of the regulations to include in gross income in 1979, only the amount equal to that being deducted by the partnership in 1979. This statement in section 1.707-1(c) relates to section 706(a) of the Code, which is a timing provision only. In this regard, the Tax Court of the United States in Cagle v. Commissioner, 539 F.2d 409, 414 N. 7 (5th Cir. 1976), aff'g 63 T.C. 86, 95 (1974) commented on the purposes underlying section 1.707-1(c):

> We think that all Congress meant was that guaranteed payments should be included in the recipient partner's income in the partnership taxable year ending with or within which the partner's taxable year ends and in which the tax accounting treatment of the transaction is determined at the partnership level.

See also S. Rept. No. 94-938 (Conf. Rep.), 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 93 (1976), 1976-3 C.B. 131.

This language merely reflects the application of the aggregate rather than the entity approach to the question of timing for inclusion of these amounts in the partner's gross income. The amount received as a finder's fee is includible in the partner's gross income under section 61 of the Code. Section 1.707-1(c) of the regulations does not permit a partner to defer inclusion of any portion of the payment received simply because the partnership that paid or accrued the expense must capitalize and amortize the expense.

HOLDING

The taxpayer A cannot apportion the amount received, but must include in gross income in 1979 the 500*x* dollars received in that year as a finder's fee.

Section 722.—Basis of Contributing Partner's Interest

26 CFR 1.722-1: Basis of contributing partner's interest.

Whether the liability created by a written obligation given as part of the purchase price for a partnership interest is included in the basis of the partnership interest. See Rev. Rul. 80-235, this page.

Section 1011.—Adjusted Basis for Determining Gain or Loss

26 CFR 1.1011-1: Adjusted basis.

Whether the liability created by a note given as the purchase price for a synthetic oil converter is included in the partnership's basis in the converter and the liability created by a written obligation given as part of the purchase price for a partnership interest is included in the basis of the partnership interest. See Rev. Rul. 80-235, below.

Section 1012.—Basis of Property—Cost

26 CFR 1.1012-1: Basis of property. (Also Sections 38, 46, 48, 722, 1011; 1.38-1, 1.46-3, 1.48-1, 1.722-1, 1.1011-1.)

Basis; synthetic oil converter purchased for nonrecourse note; partnership. The liability created by an interest-bearing nonrecourse note given by a limited partnership as the total purchase price for a synthetic oil converter and payable out of the partnership's net cash flow may not be included in the partnership's basis in the converter for purposes of investment tax credits. The liability created by a limited partner's written obligation given as part of the purchase price for a partnership interest and payable only from cash distributions from the production activities of the partnership may not be included in the basis of the limited partnership interest.

Rev. Rul. 80-235

ISSUES

(1) Is the liability created by the Purchase Note given as the purchase price for a synthetic oil converter included in the partnership's basis in the converter for purposes of the investment tax credits?

(2) Is the liability created by the 180*x* dollar written obligation given as part of the purchase price for a partnership interest included in the basis of the partnership interest?

FACTS

A, an individual, claimed to have developed a process for the conversion of coal into synthetic fuel. This process has not been commercially tested. In 1979, P, a newly organized limited partnership, entered into an agreement whereby A is to construct and install the synthetic oil converter for a total purchase price of 18,000*x* dollars. In payment for the converter, P issued A a ten-year interest-bearing nonrecourse note in the principal amount of 18,000*x* dollars ("Purchase Note"). Principal and interest at 10 percent are payable out of P's net cash flow, beginning on September 1, 1980. If net cash flow is inadequate to meet the annual installment, payment is not due until there is sufficient cash flow, but no later than 1990. The Purchase Note is secured only by the synthetic oil converter.

P has 100 limited partners. Each limited partner acquired its partnership interest for a total purchase price of 200*x* dollars, paid with 20*x* dollars in cash and a 180*x* dollar written obligation to repay a pro rata portion of the principal of the Purchase Note in six equal annual installments, with interest, starting September 1, 1980. Principal and interest on the written obligations, however, will be paid by the limited partners only from cash distributions from P that result from the production activities.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1011(a) of the Internal Revenue Code provides that, in general, the adjusted basis for determining gain or loss from the sale or disposition of property, whenever acquired, will be the basis determined under setcion 1012, adjusted as provided in section 1016.

Section 1012 of the Code provides that, in general, the basis of property will be its cost.

Section 722 of the Code provides that the basis of an interest in a partnership acquired by a contribution of property, including money, to the partnership will be the amount of such money and the adjusted basis of such property to the contributing partner at the time of the contribution.

Section 38 of the Code allows a credit against federal income tax for qualified investment in "section 38 property" as defined in section 48(a)(1). Pursuant to section 48(l), for the period beginning on October 1, 1978 (and ending on December 31, 1982), any energy property, as defined in section 48(l)(2), will be treated as "section 38 property." The amount of the credit will be equal to the sum of the percentages, set forth in section 46(a)(2), of the qualified investment. Section 46(c) provides that the qualified investment is the aggregate of the applicable percentages, determined under section 46(c)(2), of the basis of each new section 38 property placed in service by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

Section 1.46-3(c)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the basis of any new section 38 property will be determined under the general rules for determining the basis of property and, therefore, the basis of property would generally be its cost.

An obligation, the payment of which is so speculative as to create a contingent liability, cannot be included in the basis of property. Denver & Rio Grande Western R.R. Co. v. United States, 505 F.2d 1266 (Ct. Cl. 1974); Columbus and Greenville Railway Co. v. Commissioner, 42 T.C. 834 (1964), aff'd per curiam, 358 F.2d 294 (5th Cir. 1966); Albany Car Wheel Co. v. Commissioner, 40 T.C. 831 (1963), aff'd per curiam, 333 F. 2d 653 (2d Cir. 1964); Rev. Rul. 77-110, 1977-1 C.B. 58; and Rev. Rul. 78-29, 1978-1 C.B. 62. The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, in Pierce Estates v. Commissioner, 195 F.2d 475 (3d Cir. 1952), indicated that a liability is contingent of it is dependent upon the happening of a subsequent event, such as the earning of profits.

There must be adequate net cash flow before P has to make a payment of principal of the Purchase Note. Considering the nature of this new business and the fact that A's process is commercially untested, among other factors, no realistic predictions can be made about the success of the converter and therefore the net cash flow of P for any year. Because payment under the Purchase Note is contingent upon future cash flow the Purchase Note is a contingent liability.

A limited partner's written obligation to repay a portion of the principal of the Purchase Note also is a contingent liability because it is nothing more than a mere promise to repay a contingent liability and its payment is contingent upon the receipt of cash distributions from P. Furthermore, the contribution of a partner's written obligation, its personal note, to the partnership does not increase the basis of the partner's interest under section 722 of the Code because the partner has a zero basis in the written obligation. Payments on the written obligation are added to the partner's basis in the partnership as the payments are actually made.

HOLDINGS

(1) The liability created by the Purchase Note may not be included in P's basis in the synthetic oil converter for purposes of regular and energy investment credits.

(2) The liability created by the written obligation of a limited partner may not be included in the basis of the limited partnership interest.

Section 1374.—Corporation Net Operating Loss Allowed to Shareholders

26 CFR 1.1374-1: Net operating losses involving electing small business corporations.

Small business corporation; net operating loss; research and development agreement. Shareholders contributed cash to a small business corporation in exchange for stock, which was used as security to borrow, through nonrecourse notes, most of the cash contributed. The lender simultaneously sold the notes at face value to a research and development company that was hired by the small business corporation. For purposes of determining the limitation on a shareholder's net operating loss under section 1374(c) of the Code, the cash proceeds of a nonrecourse loan are not part of the basis of the stock received in exchange for such cash, because the various related steps of the financing arrangement are collapsed to show that no cash was actually advanced under the nonrecourse note.

Rev. Rul. 80-236

ISSUE

Are the proceeds received from the financing agreement described below to be included in the basis of stock of a shareholder of an electing small business corporation for purposes of computing a net operating loss allowed under section 1374(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

In 1977, ten individuals formed X, a small business corporation, which elected under 1372(c) of the Code not to be subject to the tax imposed by Chapter 1 of the Code. In exchange for stock of X, each individual contributed $5,000 cash and $25,000 obtained by means of a financing agreement with Y, a commercial lending institution. The financing was evidenced by a nonrecourse note that was secured in part by each individual's stock in X.

In conjunction with and as an inducement and consideration for Y's providing the $25,000 to each individual, Z, a corporation, agreed to purchase the nonrecourse notes from Y at a price equal to the unpaid balance of the notes plus accrued interest. As security for Z's obligation to purchase the notes from Y, Z delivered and assigned to Y a cerificate of deposit issued by Y to Z in the total amount of $250,000. Simultaneously with Y's providing the $25,000 to each individual and Z's agreement to purchase the nonrecourse notes from Y, X entered into a contract to have Z perform research and development on X's behalf. The contract price for the research and development, all payable at the execution of the contract, was $300,000. X reported no income in 1977 and reported a net operating loss of $300,000.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1374(a) of the Code provides that a net operating loss of an electing small business corporation for any taxable year shall be allowed as a deduction from gross income of the shareholders.

Section 1374(c) of the Code provides, as a limitation, that a shareholder's portion of the net operating loss of an electing small business corporation for any taxable year shall not exceed the sum of—

(a) the adjusted basis of the shareholder's stock in the electing small business corporation, determined as of the close of the taxable year of the corporation, and

(b) the adjusted basis of any indebtedness of the corporation to the shareholder, determined as of the close of the taxable year of the corporation.

Section 174(a) of the Code provides that a taxpayer may treat research or experimental expenditures that are paid or incurred by him during the taxable year in connection with his trade or business as a deductible expense.

The substance, rather than the form, of a transaction in which a taxpayer is involved governs the tax consequences of the transaction. See, for example, Commissioner v. Court Holding Company, 324 U.S. 331 (1945), 1945 C.B. 58; Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331 (1940), 1940-1 C.B. 105; Gregory v. Helvering, 293 U.S. 465, XIV-1 C.B. 193 (1935).

In this case, the financing agreement, the research and development contract, and Z's agreement inducing Y to provide the financing were all executed and entered into at the same time as part of one transaction. The arrangement cannot reasonably be said to have purpose, substance, or utility apart from its anticipated tax consequences. See Kapel Goldstein v. Commissioner, 364 F.2d 734 (2nd Cir. 1966), aff'g 44 T.C. 284 (1965), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 1005 (1967) and Knetsch v. United States, 348 F.2d 932 (Ct. Cl. 1965). In form, Y purported to provide financing to the individuals, but as a result of the interdependent simultaneous agreements the funds remained with Y as security for Z's obligation to purchase the notes from Y. In substance there was no commercial reality to the financing agreement because no one had beneficial use of the financing proceeds, and therefore the maximum amount of research and development expenditures that X could have actually incurred is limited to $50,000.

HOLDING

The proceeds from the financing agreement are not included in the basis of stock of a shareholder of an electing small business corporation for purposes of computing the net operating loss allowed under section 1374(c)(2) of the Code.

For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, the provisions of section 465 also would apply to the arrangement to deny all deductions to the extent of the amount of the nonrecourse note.

Further, the holdings do not preclude the imposition of penalties under any provision of the Code.

26 CFR 48.4061(a)-1: Imposition of tax; exclusion for light-duty trucks, etc.

Paint striping equipment. Sales, by the manufacturer, of certain paint striping equipment units that are mounted on tax-paid truck chassis are subject to the tax imposed by section 4061(a)(1) of the Code, but amounts charged for equipment that does not contribute to the highway transportation function are not part of the taxable sales price; Rev. Rul. 58-214, dealing with self-propelled line marking machines, is obsoleted.

Rev. Rul. 80-237

ISSUE

Whether sales, by the manufacturer, of certain paint striping equipment as described below that is installed on tax-paid truck chassis are subject to the manufacturers excise tax imposed by section 4061(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code.

FACTS

Unit (1). A paint striping unit that is mounted on a tax-paid truck chassis. The unit consists of a platform; paint tank and pump to fill it; bead tank to add glass beads into the wet paint immediately after it has been sprayed onto the highway; solvent tank to permit cleaning portions of the equipment, including the paint tank; piping for tanks and the pump; heating system to minimize the time it takes to dry paint on the highway; jacketed paint hoses; manifolds; gun carriages and spray guns; and an air compressor and power take-off that primarily operate equipment associated with spraying paint at the job-site.

In operation, paint is drawn from the tank through lines by an intervening hydraulic pump driven by the power take-off and some paint is returned to the tank through return lines to provide agitation. The paint not returned passes into the heating system to the paint hoses which lead to manifolds, and from there to the spray guns. The spray equipment is controlled by operators from a control panel mounted on the platform.

Additional equipment may include an intercom system to permit the operators to communicate with the driver during painting operations; flashing warning lights that stand above the platform and floodlights to permit night painting operations; a mechanical pointer; footage counter; dusting system; a cab console control for circuit breakers, switches and lights to control flashing lights and switches for the spraying system; intermittent line mechanism; control panel seats; flashing signboard; speed meter to provide audio-visual alarms to the driver in operations; and an optical pointer. This equipment is used only at the job site in connection with paint application operations.

Unit (2). A pressure-type paint striping unit that is mounted on a tax-paid truck chassis. The unit has the same basic equipment as Unit (1). This unit transfers paint from the tank to the heating apparatus by air pressure. Instead of return lines to provide agitation, that function is performed by air-operated motors and agitators located on top of the paint tanks. In addition, the power take-off primarily operates the paint fill pumps and the air compressor primarily powers the agitator and pressurizes the tanks.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Under section 4061(a)(1) of the Code, a tax is imposed on sales of automobile truck bodies and chassis by the manufacturer. Section 4061(a)(2), as added by the Revenue Act of 1971, section 401(a), 1972-1 C.B. 443, 463, applicable to sales on and after December 11, 1971, excludes from the tax imposed by section 4061(a)(1), sales by the manufacturer of truck chassis and bodies suitable for use with a vehicle having a gross vehicle weight of 10,000 pounds or less.

Under sections 48.4061(a)-1(a)(2) and (e)(1) of the Manufacturers and Retailers Excise Tax Regulations, a truck body or chassis is taxable if it is, in any sense, reasonably suitable for use as a component part of a highway vehicle (as defined in section 48.4061(a)-1(d)(1)).

Section 48.4061(a)-1(d)(1) of the regulations provides that the term "highway vehicle" means any self-propelled vehicle, or any trailer or semitrailer, designed to perform a function of transporting a load over public highways, whether or not also designed to perform other functions.

Section 48.4061(a)-1(a)(3)(i) of the regulations includes as part of a taxable truck chassis or body equipment that is installed on a taxable chassis or body and that contributes to the highway transportation function of the chassis or body. This section of the regulations says that loading and unloading equipment is an example of equipment that contributes to the highway transportation function of a chassis or body.

Section 48.4061(a)-1(a)(3)(ii) of the regulations provides that amounts charged for equipment installed on a taxable chassis or body are not part of the taxable sale price if (A) such equipment does not contribute toward the highway transportation function of the chassis or body and (B) the reasonableness of the charge is supported by adequate records.

Rev. Rul. 58-214, 1958-1 C.B. 399, holds that a self-propelled line marking machine designed for use in painting guide lines on highways, streets, parking lots, airports, playgrounds, etc., is not a taxable motor vehicle. This machine consists primarily of an engine for driving a compressor and propelling the machine, a paint tank, spray guns, and controls. It has a steel platform on which a person may stand to steer the vehicle and operate the paint equipment, 4.00 x 8 pneumatic tires having an overall diameter of sixteen inches, a normal painting speed of three to six miles per hour, but does not have head lights or tail lights.

Rev. Rul. 74-47, 1974-1 C.B. 307, holds that power takeoff systems and components thereof that are designed to operate both taxable and nontaxable equipment are not taxable under section 4061(b) of the Code if primarily designed to operate nontaxable equipment. This test is equally appropriate under section 4061(a)(1) for power take-offs and air compressors.

Rev. Rul. 58-214 limits its conclusion to the line marking machine described in that ruling and thus is not applicable to Units (1) and (2) described above.

Moreover, although not expressly stated in Rev. Rul. 58-214, the line marking machine described therein has a gross vehicle weight of less than 10,000 pounds. Thus, effective for sales of the vehicle by the manufacturer on or after December 11, 1971, the vehicle comes within the scope of the exclusion provided by section 4061(a)(2) of the Code.

Units (1) and (2) described above are component parts of vehicles designed to transport a load over the public highway to a job site. The platform, paint tank and fill pump, bead tank, solvent tank, intervening pump, and the piping and lines used to unload the tanks contribute to the highway transportation of paint to the jobsite. Thus, these articles constitute a truck body of a highway vehicle.

The agitator equipment on Unit (2) and the power take-off and air compressor on that unit load and unload the unit and thereby are part of the body. The heating system, which is used on both units, is not required to preserve the paint or further liquefy it for unloading and, therefore, it is primarily designed to apply the paint rather than for transportation. Likewise, with respect to both units, the jacketed hoses, manifolds, gun carriages and spray guns, and the above-listed additional equipment are primarily designed for such purpose.

HOLDING

Sales by the manufacturer of Units (1) and (2) are subject to the tax imposed by section 4061(a)(1) of the Code. Amounts charged for the air compressor and power take-off on Unit (2) are part of the taxable sale price but amounts charged for such articles on Unit (1) are not part of the taxable sale price provided the reasonableness of the charges is supported by adequate records. In addition, amounts charged with respect to both Units for the heating system, jacketed hoses, manifold, gun carriages, spray guns, intercom system, flashing warning lights and floodlights, mechanical pointer, footage counter, dusting system, cab console control, intermittent line mechanism, control panel seats, flashing signboard, speed meter, and optical pointer are not part of the taxable sale price, provided the charges are properly supported.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER D, PARTS 48 AND 140.—MISCELLANEOUS EXCISE TAXES

Payments to be made to aerial applicators in certain cases

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations governing claims by aerial applicators for payment of an amount equal to the tax imposed on gasoline and special fuels used on farms for farming purposes. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by section 3 of the Act of October 14, 1978 (Public Law 95-458) [1978-2 C.B. 367, 368]. These regulations affect all aerial applicators and all owners, tenants, and operators of farms who employ the services of aerial applicators. The regulations provide the guidance needed to comply with the law.

EFFECTIVE DATE: The regulations apply to payments for gasoline and special fuels used after March 31, 1979, on farms for farming purposes by aerial applicators.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On December 27, 1979 [44 FR 76563], the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Miscellaneous Excise Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 48), and temporary excise tax regulations under section 3 of the Act of October 14, 1978 (Public Law 95-458; 26 CFR Part 140), both relating to claims by aerial applicators for payment of an amount equal to the taxes imposed under sections 4081 and 4041 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 ("Code") on gasoline and special fuels used on farms for farming purposes. Sections 6420 and 6427 of the Code authorize the payments to the user and ultimate purchaser of these fuels. The law was amended by section 3 of the Act of October 14, 1978 (Pub. L. 95-458, 92 Stat. 1257) to permit aerial applicators to receive payments as users and ultimate purchasers of fuels they use on farms for farming purposes.

No public comments were received in response to the invitation contained in the proposed amendments to the regulations, and no public hearing on the proposal was held. This document revokes the temporary regulations (26 CFR Part 140) and adopts final regulations (26 CFR Part 48).

PROVISIONS OF THE REGULATIONS

Sections 6420 and 6427 provide, respectively, for payment to the user and ultimate purchaser of an amount equal to the tax imposed under section 4081 on gasoline and under section 4041 on special fuels, if the gasoline or special fuel is used on a farm for farming purposes. For fuel used before April 1, 1979, only the owner, tenant, or operator of a farm is entitled to claim a payment as user and ultimate purchaser. Section 3 of the Act of October 14, 1978, amended sections 6420 and 6427 to entitle aerial applicators to receive these payments for fuels used by them after March 31, 1979. Before an aerial applicator may receive a payment, however, the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm served by the aerial applicator must waive his or her right to receive the payment in a written statement retained by the aerial applicator. The statement waiving the right of the owner, tenant, or operator to be treated as the user and ultimate purchaser of the gasoline or special fuels may be in any form that substantially meets the requirements of the regulations.

ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATIONS

These regulations are needed in order to provide guidance to the public as well as to government employees responsible for implementation of sections 6420 and 6427 of the Code. Considering both the direct and indirect effects of these regulations, it is believed that they satisfactorily implement section 3 of the Act of October 14, 1978 (Public Law 95-458). Evaluation of the effectiveness of the regulations after issuance will be based upon comments received from offices within the Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department, and from members of the public.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is H. B. Hartley of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

The following amendments to the regulations (26 CFR Part 48) are hereby adopted:

PART 48—MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS EXCISE TAXES

Paragraph 1. Section 48.6420(a)-1 is retitled and paragraphs (a)(1) and

(b) thereof are amended to read as follows:

§ 48.6420(a)-1. Payments to user and ultimate purchaser of gasoline used on a farm for farming purposes.

(a) In general. (1) Section 6420 provides a payment (without interest) to the user and ultimate purchaser of gasoline used on a farm for farming purposes. The amount of the payment is determined by multiplying (i) the number of gallons of gasoline used on the farm for farming purposes by (ii) the rate of tax on gasoline under section 4081 which applied on the date the gasoline was purchased by the user and ultimate purchaser. No payment shall be made for gasoline purchased by a user and ultimate purchaser before January 1, 1956, irrespective of the use of gasoline. For gasoline purchased after December 31, 1955, and used on a farm for farming purposes, payment is made only if the user and ultimate purchaser files a claim at the time and in the manner indicated in these regulations. For rates of tax on gasoline under section 4081, see that section and § 48.4081-1. For the meaning of the terms "used on a farm for farming purposes", "farm", "farming purposes", and "gasoline", see § 48.6420(c)-1. For the meaning of "user and ultimate purchaser" see paragraph (b) of this section.

(b) User and ultimate purchaser defined. Except as otherwise provided in section 6420, the term "user and ultimate purchaser" means only an owner, tenant, or operator of a farm. In general, an owner, tenant, or operator of a farm is considered to be the user and ultimate purchaser of gasoline only if the gasoline is (1) purchased by him or her and (2) used for farming purposes on a farm of which he or she is the owner, tenant, or operator. If, however, the cost of gasoline supplied by a particular person (e.g., an owner of a farm) is by agreement borne by the tenant or operator of the farm, the tenant or operator who bore the cost of the gasoline is the user and ultimate purchaser. See paragraph (c) of this section for rules on gasoline used on farms by persons other than the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm.

* * * * *

Par. 2. The second sentence of § 48.6420(a)-1(c)(1) is amended, a new third sentence is inserted therein, and a new example (3) is added to the end of § 48.6420(a)-1(c)(2), all to read as follows:

§ 48.6420(a)-1. Payments to user and ultimate purchaser of gasoline used on a farm for farming purposes.

(c) Exception with respect to use by custom operator, etc.—(1) * * * In such a case, the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm on which the gasoline is used is considered to be the user and ultimate purchaser of the gasoline. See, however, section 6420(c)(4) which provides for waivers by owners, tenants, and operators of their right to be so treated when gasoline is used on the farm by an aerial applicator. * * *

(2) The application of paragraph (c)(1) of this section may be illustrated by the following examples.

* * * * *

Example (3). Assume the facts of example (2) except Farmer A executes a timely waiver (as provided in § 48.6420(c)-2) of his right to be treated as user and ultimate purchaser of the fuel used by XYZ Company in dusting his crops. XYZ Company is entitled to receive the payment for the 600 gallons of gasoline actually used by it in the crop dusting operation.

Par. 3. Paragraphs (d) and (e) of § 48.6420(b)-1 are deleted and paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of that section are amended to read as follows:

(a) In general. A claim in respect of gasoline used on a farm for farming purposes must cover one full taxable year. A person's taxable year means his or her taxable year for purposes of subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code. In the case of persons included under section 6420(g), the calendar year is considered to be the person's taxable year. Gasoline on hand at the end of one taxable year (e.g., fuel in supply tanks of farm machinery or in storage tanks and drums) must be excluded from a claim filed for that year. On the other hand, gasoline used during a taxable year may be covered by a claim for the year even though the gasoline has not been paid for at the time the claim is filed. A claim for any taxable year is not allowable unless filed on or before the last date prescribed by law for filing a claim for credit or refund of overpayment of income tax for the taxable year concerned.

(b) Limit of one claim during any one taxable year. Not more than one claim can be filed under section 6420 by any person for gasoline used during any one taxable year.

(c) Form and content of claim. All persons except those identified in section 6420(g), must claim any payment allowed them under section 6420 as a credit against tax on their income tax return (or a timely amended return) for the taxable year in which the gasoline was used. For persons identified in section 6420(g), a claim for payment for gasoline used on a farm for farming purposes is made on Form 843 in accordance with the instructions prescribed for the preparation of that form. A claim for a partnership must be shown on the partnership's return.

Par. 4. Paragraph (c)(2)(i) of § 48.6420(c)-1 is amended by deleting the last sentence thereof, and paragraph (c)(5) of that section is amended by deleting the first four words of the third sentence and inserting in lieu thereof, "Since the gasoline must generally".

Par. 5. A new § 48.6420(c)-2 is inserted immediately following § 48.6420(c)-1 to read as follows:

§ 48.6420(c)-2. Payment under section 6420 to be made to aerial applicators in certain cases.

(a) Effective date. This regulation is effective for payments for gasoline used after March 31, 1979, by aerial applicators on farms for farming purposes.

(b) General rule. Section 6420 provides a payment to the user and ultimate purchaser of gasoline used on a farm for farming purposes of an amount equal to the tax imposed on gasoline under section 4081. The general rule of section 6420(c)(3)(A) is that only the owner, tenant, or operator of a farm is entitled to be treated as a user and ultimate purchaser. Section 6420(c)(4) provides that under section 6420(c)(3)(A), an aerial applicator is entitled to be treated as the user and ultimate purchaser of gasoline used by it on a farm for farming purposes, but only if the owner, tenant, or operator who is otherwise entitled to treatment as the user and ultimate purchaser waives his or her right to the payment.

(c) Form and manner of waiver. To waive the right to be treated as user and ultimate purchaser of gasoline which is used on a farm by an aerial applicator, the owner, tenant, or operator of a farm who is otherwise entitled to treatment as user and ultimate purchaser must execute an irrevocable written agreement no later than the date on which the aerial applicator claiming the credit files its return for the taxable year in which the gasoline is used. The agreement must identify the period during which the owner, tenant, or operator waives his or her right to payment. The effective period of the waiver cannot extend beyond the last day of the taxable year of the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm on which the gasoline was used. If the owner, tenant, or operator's taxable year extends beyond the taxable year of the applicator, the applicator can only claim payment for periods included in the applicator's taxable year. Periods after the last day of the applicator's taxable year which are included under the agreement must be claimed on the applicator's return for the next succeeding taxable year. The waiver may be in the form shown under paragraph (g) of this section or in any other form that meets the requirements of these regulations, but must clearly evidence that the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm knowingly gives up the right to receive a payment.

(d) Agreement included on aerial applicator's invoice. The agreement waiving a right to receive a payment under section 6420 may be a separate document or may appear on the face or the reverse side of an invoice for aerial application services or other unrelated document from the aerial applicator to the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm. If the waiver agreement appears on an invoice or other unrelated document, however, it must be printed in a section of the invoice or other document clearly set off from all other material contained in the invoice or other document, and it must be printed in type sufficiently large to put the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm on notice that he or she has waived his or her right to receive a payment under section 6420. Additionally, if the waiver agreement appears as part of any invoice or other unrelated document, it must be executed separately from any other item included in the invoice or other document which requires the owner, tenant, or operator's signature.

(e) Copies of agreement waiving right to payment. No copies of any agreement waiving a right to payments under section 6420 are to be submitted to the Internal Revenue Service unless a request is made by the Service to the taxpayer for the waivers. Aerial applicators must, however, retain copies of all waivers, and a copy of each waiver must be supplied by the aerial applicator to the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm who waives his or her right to receive a payment. See regulations § 48.6420(f)-1 for general requirements for records to be kept.

(f) Waiver on behalf of owner, tenant, or operator of farm. If any owner, tenant, or operator of a farm desires that an agent (e.g., a cooperative) act for him or her or cannot legally bind himself or herself due to infancy or other incompetency, a representative expressly authorized under local law to bind the owner, tenant, or operator in a waiver of his or her rights to payment under section 6420 may sign the waiver on his or her behalf.

(g) Sample form of agreement. While no specific form is required for an effective waiver, an acceptable form waiving the right to receive a payment under section 6420 follows:

I hereby waive my right as owner/tenant/operator of a farm located at (address) ______________________ to receive payment or credit from the United States for gasoline used by (aerial applicator) ______________ on the farm in connection with cultivating the soil, or the raising or harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodity. This waiver applies to gasoline used during the period ______________________, both dates inclusive.

I understand that by signing this waiver I give up my right to claim any credit or payment for gasoline used by the aerial applicator during the period indicated, and I acknowledge that I have not previously claimed any credit or payment for that gasoline.

Par. 6. A new § 48.6427-1 is inserted following § 48.6421(g)-1 to read as follows:

§ 48.6427-1 Payment under section 6427 to be made to aerial applicators in certain cases.

(a) Effective date. This regulation is effective for payments for special fuels used after March 31, 1979, by aerial applicators on farms for farming purposes.

(b) In general. Section 6427 provides for payment to the user and ultimate purchaser of certain fuels used on a farm for farming purposes of an amount equal to the amount of tax imposed on these fuels under section 4041. The general rule is that only an owner, tenant, or operator of a farm is entitled to be treated as a user and ultimate purchaser. Section 6427(c) provides that an aerial applicator is entitled to be treated as the user and ultimate purchaser of fuels which it uses on a farm for farming purposes, but only if the owner, tenant, or operator who is otherwise entitled to treatment as the user and ultimate purchaser waives his or her right to the payment.

(c) Form and manner of waiver. To waive the right to be treated as user and ultimate purchaser of special fuels which are used on a farm by an aerial applicator, the owner, tenant, or operator of a farm who is otherwise entitled to treatment as user and ultimate purchaser must execute an irrevocable written agreement no later than the date on which the aerial applicator claiming the credit files its return for the taxable year in which the special fuels are used. The agreement must identify the period during which the owner, tenant, or operator waives his or her right to payment. The effective period of the waiver cannot extend beyond the last day of the taxable year of the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm on which the special fuels were used. If the owner, tenant, or operator's taxable year extends beyond the taxable year of the applicator, the applicator can only claim payment for periods included in the applicator's taxable year. Periods after the last day of the applicator's taxable year which are included under the agreement must be claimed on the applicator's return for the next succeeding taxable year. The waiver may be in the form shown under paragraph (g) of this section or in any other form that meets the requirements of these regulations, but must clearly evidence that the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm knowingly gives up the right to receive a payment.

(d) Agreement included on aerial applicator's invoice. The agreement waiving a right to receive a payment under section 6427 may be a separate document or may appear on the face or the reverse side of an invoice for aerial application services or other unrelated document from the aerial applicator to the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm. If the waiver agreement appears on an invoice or other unrelated document, however, it must be printed in a section of the invoice or other document clearly set off from all other material contained in the invoice or other document, and it must be printed in type sufficiently large to put the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm on notice that he or she has waived his or her right to receive a payment under section 6427. Additionally, if the waiver agreement appears as part of any invoice or other unrelated document, it must be executed separately from any other item included in the invoice or other document which requires the owner, tenant, or operator's signature.

(e) Copies of agreement waiving right to payment. No copies of any agreement waiving a right to payments under section 6427 are to be submitted to the Internal Revenue Service unless a request is made by the Service to the taxpayer for the waivers. Aerial applicators must, however, retain copies of all waivers, and a copy of each waiver must be supplied by the aerial applicator to the owner, tenant, or operator of the farm who waives his or her right to receive a payment. See regulations § 48.6420(f)-1 for general requirements for records to be kept.

(f) Waiver on behalf of owner, tenant, or operator of farm. If any owner, tenant, or operator of a farm desires that an agent (e.g., a cooperative) act for him or her or cannot legally bind himself or herself due to infancy or other incompetency, a representative expressly authorized under local law to bind the owner, tenant, or operator in a waiver of his or her rights to a payment under section 6427 may sign the waiver on his or her behalf.

(g) Sample form of agreement. While no specific form is required for an effective waiver, an acceptable form waiving the right to receive a payment under section 6427 follows:

I hereby waive my right as owner/tenant/operator of a farm located at (address) ____________________ to receive payment or credit from the United States for special fuels used by (aerial applicator) ________________ on the farm in connection with cultivating the soil, or the raising or harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodity. This waiver applies to special fuels used during the period ______________________, both dates inclusive.

I understand that by signing this waiver I give up my right to claim any credit or payment for special fuels used by the aerial applicator during the period indicated, and I acknowledge that I have not previously claimed any credit or payment for that special fuel.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION

BACKGROUND

On February 21, 1980, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Regulations on Procedure and Administration (26 CFR Part 301) under section 7216 of the Code. No comments were received with respect to the proposed amendments, and no public hearing was requested or held. The proposed amendments are adopted by this Treasury decision without change.

EXPLANATION

Section 7216(a) provides that a tax return preparer who discloses or uses any tax return information other than for the specific purpose of preparing, or assisting in the preparation of, any tax return of the taxpayer by or for whom the information was made available to the tax return preparer, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 7216(b) provides exceptions to the general rule of section 7216(a).

The amendment made to § 301.7216-2(c) of the regulations exempts from the provision of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 the disclosure of income tax information made pursuant to an administrative order, demand, summons, or subpoena issued in the performance of its duties by any State agency, body, or commission charged under the laws of a State or political subdivision of the State with licensing, registration or regulation of tax return preparers. The order, demand, summons, or subpoena must clearly identify the information to be disclosed. Paragraph (c) is also amended to include all Federal agency orders and not simply the orders of a Federal regulatory agency. In addition, § 301.7216-2(n) is amended to permit disclosure to local officials of tax return information relating to the commission of a crime.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Jacob Feldman of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to 26 CFR Part 301 are hereby adopted:

§ 301.7216-2 Disclosure or use without formal consent of the taxpayer.

* * * * *

(c) Disclosure pursuant to an order of a court or of a Federal or State agency. The provisions of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 do not apply to any disclosure of tax return information if such disclosure is made pursuant to any one of the following documents:

(1) The order of any court of record, Federal, State, or local, or

(2) An administrative order, demand, summons, or subpoena which is issued in the performance of its duties by—

(i) Any Federal agency, or

(ii) A State agency, body, or commision charged under the laws of the State or a political subdivision of the State with the licensing, registration, or regulation of tax return preparers.

Information must be clearly identified in the document in order to be disclosed under this paragraph (c).

(n) Disclosure to report the commission of a crime. The provisions of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 do not apply to the disclosure of any tax return information to the proper Federal, State or local official in order, and to the extent necessary, to inform the official of activities which may constitute, or may have constituted, a violation of any criminal law. In addition, such a disclosure made in the bona fide but mistaken belief that the activities constituted a violation of criminal law is not subject to section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1.

Any suspension under this paragraph with respect to a metal or mineral shall be permanent unless there is a redetermination affecting such metal or mineral under paragraph (2).

"(2) LATER COMPUTATION OF TAX —If the permittee processes any metal or mineral affected by the election under paragraph (1), or if he sells any portion of the resource containing such a metal or mineral, then the amount of the tax under section 4495 shall be redetermined as if there had been no suspension under paragraph (1) with respect to such metal or mineral. In any such case there shall be added to the increase in tax determined under the preceding sentence an amount equal to the interest (at rates determined under section 6621) on such increase for the period from the date prescribed for paying the tax on the resources (determined under section 4495(d)) to the date of the processing or sale.

DEEP SEABED HARD MINERAL RESOURCES ACT

NOVEMBER 2, 1979

Mr. ULLMAN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following report to accompany H.R. 2759[1] which on March 8, 1979, was jointly referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 2759) to promote the orderly development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed, pending adoption of an international regime relating thereto, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment (stated in terms of page and line numbers of the introduced bill) is as follows:

I. SUMMARY

Under title IV of the bill, an excise tax is imposed on the removal from the deep seabed of nodules containing manganese, nickel, cobalt or copper. The tax rate is 3.75 percent of the "imputed value" of the nodules removed. The imputed value is defined as 20 percent of the fair market value of the commercially recoverable metals or minerals contained in the nodule; thus the tax, in effect, is 0.75 percent of the fair market value of the commercially recoverable metals and minerals in the nodules. The tax will take effect on January 1, 1980, and will terminate when an international deep seabed treaty meeting specified requirements comes into force with respect to the United States, or after 10 years from the date of enactment of the Act, whichever is earlier.

The proceeds of the tax are to be paid into a Deep Seabed Revenue Sharing Trust Fund established by title IV. The amounts in the Trust Fund will be available for appropriation by Congress to make contributions under the international deep seabed treaty. If there is no [2] treaty after 10 years, Congress will determine the disposition of the amounts in the Trust Fund.

H.R. 2759 was also referred to the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and Foreign Relations.

II. GENERAL STATEMENT

Present law

At present, the deep seabed is not being mined on a commercial basis. The provisions of H.R. 2759 other than title IV are intended to establish a framework which would permit U.S. persons to undertake deep seabed mining in an orderly manner. Under present law, no Federal excise taxes are imposed on the removal of minerals from the deep seabed.

Reasons for change

Since 1967, discussions have been under way at the United Nations on the use of ocean space. In 1970, the United Nations General Assembly adopted in Resolution 2749 a declaration of principles which stated that "the seabed and ocean floor and the subsoil thereof beyond the limits of national jurisdiction, as well as the resources of the area, are the common heritage of mankind," and that "no state or person, natural or juridical, shall claim, exercise, or acquire rights with respect to the area or its resources incompatible with the international regime to be established and the principle of this Declaration." The United States supported this declaration of principles, while simultaneously maintaining that deep seabed mining constitutes a freedom of the high seas according to the principles of the 1958 Geneva Convention on the Deep Seas. Discussions on these and other matters led the General Assembly to agree to hold a third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea.

The Law of the Sea Conference, which was formally opened in 1973, has not yet been able to reach agreement with respect to the creation of a proposed international seabed authority which would govern the exploration for and the mining of minerals from the area of the deep seabed which is beyond the national jurisdiction of the United States or any foreign country. In response to the apparent lack of progress in these negotiations, H.R. 2759, the Deep Seabed Hard Minerals Resources Act, would establish an interim framework governing deep seabed mining until an international treaty enters into force with respect to the United States. The committee believes that the creation of the Revenue Sharing Trust Fund and the imposition of the excise tax on the removal of hard minerals from the deep seabed, as provided by title IV of the bill, demonstrate the United States' commitment to the principle that deep seabed resources are part of the common heritage of mankind.

Explanation of provisions

Excise tax

Under title IV of the bill, an excise tax is imposed on the removal of hard mineral resources from the deep seabed. The holder of a permit (referred to in this explanation as the "mining company") issued under the Act is to be liable for the payment of the tax. The mining company will be liable regardless of whether it removes nod- [3] ules itself from the deep seabed, or authorizes another to remove the nodules on its behalf. Similarly, the mining company is to be liable for the payment of the tax where it acquiesces in the removal of nodules from its permit area by another.

For purposes of the tax, the "deep seabed" is the seabed, including its subsoil to a depth of 10 meters, lying seaward of, and outside (1) the continental shelf of any foreign country, and (2) any foreign country's national resource jurisdiction which is recognized by the United States and which extends beyond the continental shelf of that nation. For this purpose, "continental shelf" means (1) the seabed and subsoil of the submarine areas adjacent to the coast, but outside the area of the territorial sea, to a depth of 200 meters or, beyond that limit, to where the depth of the superjacent waters admits of the exploitation of the natural resources of those areas, and (2) the seabed and subsoil of similar submarine areas adjacent to the coasts of islands. A "hard mineral resource," the removal of which is subject to the tax, is any deposit or accretion on, or just below, the surface of the deep seabed of nodules which contain manganese, nickel, cobalt, or copper. These definitions are the same as those applicable under the other titles of H.R. 2759.

The excise tax is imposed at the rate of 3.75 percent of the "imputed value" of the nodules removed from the deep seabed. The "imputed value" for this purpose is 20 percent of the fair market value of the commercially recoverable metals and minerals contained in the nodules. Thus, the excise tax, in effect, is imposed at the rate of 0.75 percent of the fair market value of the commercially recoverable metals and minerals. The 20-percent figure relates to the estimated proportional share of the costs of the mining process itself in relation to the total costs involved in mining, transporting, processing, and marketing the nodules. This is consistent with the United States' Law of the Sea negotiating position, as it would limit revenue sharing to the mining phase alone. The rate of tax set in the bill is not intended to serve as a guideline or precedent which would be binding for any profit sharing or royalty agreement negotiated by the United States at the Law of the Sea Conference.

The excise tax is to be imposed with respect to any commercially recoverable metals or minerals contained in the nodule, so long as the nodule contains manganese, nickel, cobalt or copper. Thus, the tax is to be imposed on the imputed value of all commercially recoverable minerals contained in the nodules removed from the deep seabed, regardless of whether or not they are one of the four previously mentioned. Commercial recoverability is to be determined with respect to the technical considerations and economic conditions prevailing at the time of removal of the nodules from the deep seabed. Moreover, the tax will be imposed on any manganese, nickel, cobalt or copper from nodules removed from the deep seabed which is processed, used, or sold by the mining company, even if that mineral was not commercially recoverable at the time of removal.

The fair market value of each commercially recoverable metal or mineral contained in a nodule is to be determined (1) as of the date of the removal of the nodule from the seabed and (2) as if it were separated from the nodule and in the most basic form for which there is a readily ascertainable market price and a substantial volume of sales. Determinations of value (including determinations as to the appropri-[4]ate basic form and commercial recoverability) for this and all other purposes under the tax are to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, after consultation with other appropriate Federal officials, on the basis of the best available information. These determinations are to be made under procedures established by regulations.

Moreover, in order to facilitate both certainty in ascertaining tax liability and the efficient and expeditious administration and collection of the tax, the committee anticipates that the Secretary, pursuant to these procedures, may make determinations as to the value of the nodules removed based, in part, upon reasonable assumptions as to the various metals and minerals generally contained in nodules removed from any particular deep seabed area. For example, the committee anticipates that the Secretary may specify that nodules removed from an area are presumed conclusively to contain x percent of one mineral, y percent of another, and z percent of a third mineral, and that the balance of the nodule consists of minerals which are not commercially recoverable. The Secretary may also by regulations prescribe for each metal or mineral (including manganese, nickel, cobalt, and copper) de minimis quantities or percentages below which the metal or mineral will be treated as not commercially recoverable.

Although the excise tax is imposed on the removal of the nodule from the deep seabed, the tax is not payable until the time prescribed by regulation by the Secretary of the Treasury. This time may not be earlier than the earlier of (1) the commercial use or the sale or disposition of any metal or mineral in the nodule so removed, or (2) the day which is 12 months after the date of the removal of the nodule. The tax due at the time would be based on the value of all commercially recoverable metals and minerals in the nodule except those for which the mining company has elected to suspend the tax, as described below. For this purpose, "commercial use" means use as a mineral product and not merely as a bulk material, such as ballast. A "disposition" includes any transfer, e.g., a distribution by a mining company as a dividend or in liquidation or a contribution to capital of a subsidiary, for use as a mineral product and not as bulk material. A disposition would not include abandonment or a transfer to an unrelated party which is not for value.

As an exception to the general rules, the mining company may elect, in a manner to be prescribed by regulations, to have the application of the tax suspended with respect to one or more commercially recoverable metals or minerals contained in the nodules if the mining company does not intend to process, use commercially, or sell that metal or mineral within 1 year after the date of extraction. The imputed value of the metals or minerals with respect to which the election is made is not to be taken into account in determining the tax. However, if the mining company subsequently recovers any metal or mineral with respect to which the election was made from the nodules, or if it uses commercially or sells any portion of the nodules containing a metal or mineral so reserved, the tax is to be redetermined as if the election with respect to that metal or mineral or that portion had not been made. Thus, upon a subsequent processing, commercial use, or sale of a previously reserved metal or mineral (or the resource in which it is contained), an additional tax will be due from the mining company. Furthermore, in such an event, the mining company is also to pay an [5] amount equal to interest (determined at the rates for interest on deficiencies and overpayments of tax) on the additional tax for the period from the date on which the tax would have been imposed if the election had not been made to the date of processing, commercial use, or sale. It is intended that the suspension election may be made with respect to any portion of the nodules recovered. Moreover, redeterminations of the tax shall be made only with respect to those nodules (or the intermediate products of the nodules) which are actually processed, used commercially, or sold. Unless a mining company can identify the nodules, it will be treated as processing, commercially using, or selling them on a first in-first out basis. If the metals or minerals with respect to which an election has been made are never processed, used commercially, or sold, no tax will be payable with respect to them.

The tax is not to apply to any removal of nodules from the deep seabed after the earlier of (1) 10 years after the date of enactment of the Act, or (2) the date on which an international deep seabed treaty to which the Senate has given its advice and consent to ratification takes effect with respect to the United States. For this purpose, an "international deep seabed treaty" means any treaty adopted by the United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea which requires contributions either by the United States or the mining company to an international fund for the sharing of revenues from deep seabed mining. Any other bilateral or multilateral treaty or agreement which the United States may enter into which relates to deep seabed mining will not terminate the tax. In case an election has been made to suspend the tax with respect to certain metals or minerals from the tax, the tax will apply to those metals or minerals when they are processed, used, or sold even if that date is subsequent to the termination date of the tax, if removal from the deep seabed occurred prior to the termination date.

Matters relating to collection and other administrative aspects of the tax are to be determined under applicable provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and regulations promulgated by the Treasury Department.

Deep Seabed Revenue Sharing Trust Fund

The proceeds of the excise tax are held in a Deep Seabed Revenue Sharing Trust Fund established pursuant to title IV of the bill. The Trust Fund is to be administered by the Treasury Department and is to consist of the amounts appropriated or credited to it in accordance with title IV.

Title IV of the bill provides that amounts in the Trust Fund shall be available, as provided by appropriations Acts, for making contributions which may be required pursuant to an international deep seabed treaty (as described above under the heading "Excise Tax") which may become effective with respect to the United States on or before the date 10 years after the date of the enactment of H.R. 2759. The contributions for which Trust Fund amounts may be appropriated are to be for the purpose of sharing the revenue from deep seabed mining among nations of the world. Nothing in title IV is intended to authorize any program or other activity not otherwise authorized by law.

[6] Effect on tax, tariff, and customs laws

The title specifically provides that nothing in H.R. 2759, other than the tax imposed by title IV, shall affect the application of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or the application of the customs and tariff laws of the United States. It is anticipated that the tax, customs, and tariff consequences of deep seabed mining will be the subject of future [7] legislative proposals which may be considered by the committee. Accordingly, this provision is intended to make it clear that, pending that consideration, H.R. 2759 will not explicitly or implicitly convey any tax, customs or tariff benefits which would not be available in its absence.

Effective date

The provisions relating to the excise tax on deep seabed mining are to take effect on January 1, 1980. They are to terminate on the earlier of the date 10 years from the date of the enactment of H.R. 2759, or at the time when an international deep seabed treaty comes into effect with respect to the United States.

Senate Report No. 96-307
1st Session

DEEP SEABED MINERAL RESOURCES ACT

August 9, 1979

Mr. Jackson, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, and on behalf of Mr. Cannon, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation; and Mr. Church, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report together with additional views to accompany S. 493. [1]

The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources; Commerce, Science and Transportation; and Foreign Relations, to which was jointly referred the bill (S. 493) to promote the orderly development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed, pending adoption of an international regime relating thereto, and for other purposes, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon with amendments and recommends that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Purpose

The Deep Seabed Mineral Resources Act is designed to promote the conservation and orderly development of the manganese nodule resources of the deep seabed by United States citizens. It is interim legislation which expressly provides that it will be superseded by the terms of any international agreement binding on the United States. Negotiations looking toward such an agreement are currently underway at the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea.

[64] Department of the Treasury,
Office of the General Counsel,
Washington, D.C.,
April 10, 1979.

Hon. Henry M. Jackson,
Chairman, U.S. Senate, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources,
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Chairman: This is in reply to your request for the views of the Department of the Treasury on S. 493, the "Deep Seabed Mineral Resources Act."

* * * * *

[65] Title V may also be cited as the "Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Removal Tax Act of 1979." The Department has no objection to the provisions contained in section 502 and strongly supports section 504.

However, the Department has two technical comments relating to section 502. First, the definitions in proposed section 4496 of the Internal Revenue Code includes a definition of the Continental Shelf. The Department notes that this definition is broader than the definition of continental shelf areas contained in section 638 of the Internal Revenue Code. Second, the Department notes that the effective date provision in subsection (c) does not require the issuance of regulations required by proposed section 4497 of the Internal Revenue Code dealing with imputed value. Although the imputed value determinations required to be done by regulation could be accomplished by the Secretary of the Treasury without regulations, the Internal Revenue [66] Service will need administrative time to develop the program and forms required by a regulatory scheme.

Amounts equivalent to the taxes imposed under section 502 would be credited to the Deep Seabed Fund established by section 503. The Department supports the establishment of this fund in this case to bolster the principle of the "common heritage of mankind." The 3.75 percent is a reasonable revenue sharing obligation under domestic seabed legislation and is high enough to demonstrate the United States' commitment to this principle.

The Department, however, is reviewing the transfer, management, and expenditures provision of the fund to determine their consistency with current fiscal policy. A separate report will be submitted by the Department to Congress regarding these technical aspects of the Deep Seabed Fund.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administrations program to the submission of this report to your Committee.

Sincerely yours,

H. C. Stockell, Jr.,
Deputy General Counsel

[96] ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

S. 493 is similar to the bill (S. 2053) reported by the Committee on August 16, 1978. Therefore, in its mark-up on July 30, 1979, the Committee focused primarily upon the differences between S. 493, as reported by the Energy Committee, and the bill reported last session. The Committee also took note of certain changes proposed to the bill by the Commerce Committee in its mark-up of July 27, 1979.

Fifteen principal issues were considered by the Foreign Relations Committee:

1. Deep Seabed Fund and Tax Provisions: Title V

The Committee endorsed the establishment of a deep seabed fund, represented by Title V of S. 493, as providing the basis for United States contributions to any future deep seabed regime established by a Law of the Sea Treaty. It recalled that during its consideration of S. 2053 last year, the Committee had decided to recommend a royalty figure of 10 percent of imputed value, rather than the 3.75 percent contained in S. 493. However, the Committee took note of the fact that the Administration was not supporting this higher royalty figure and that the mining industry was strongly opposed to it. No changes were made in Title V.

In order to acquire indirect ownership of a bank through a bank holding company and to satisfy the appropriate banking rules and regulations, an individual borrowed money from an unrelated financial institution to acquire 90 percent of the bank's stock and acquired the remaining stock with personal funds. The individual then formed a new bank holding company and immediately transferred all of the bank's stock to it in exchange for all of the holding company's stock and the holding company's assumption of the individual's acquisition indebtedness. Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Section 243.—Dividends Received by Corporations

26 CFR 1.243-1: Deduction for dividends received by corporations.

Whether the writing of a call option by a taxpayer on stock held by such taxpayer will reduce the holding period required by section 246(c)(1)(A) of the Code for purposes of the allowance of the deduction for dividends received provided by section 243 of the Code. See Rev. Rul. 80-238, below.

Section 246.—Rules Applying to Deductions for Dividends Received

26 CFR 1.246-3: Exclusion of certain dividends.
(Also Section 243; 1.243-1.)

Call option; dividends received deduction; holding period. The writing of a call option by a domestic corporation on stock held by the corporation does not reduce the holding period that is required by section 246(c)(1)(A) of the Code for purposes of the deduction for dividends received provided by section 243.

Rev. Rul. 80-238

ISSUE

Does the writing of a "call" option by a taxpayer on stock held by the taxpayer reduce the holding period required by section 246(c)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code for purposes of the allowance of the deduction for dividends received provided by section 243 of the Code?

FACTS

The taxpayer, a domestic corporation engaged in an insurance business, purchases regularly traded common stock of other domestic corporations for investment purposes. In order to earn additional income, the taxpayer writes "call" options on such stock within 15 days of their purchase. The taxpayer receives immediate payment for these options and, in return, provides buyers with the right, for a specified period of time, to demand delivery of the underlying stock at a stated price. For example, the taxpayer purchased stock at $110 per share and sold call options on this stock at $10 per share that could be exercised within six months of purchase, with the striking price for the stock fixed at $130. At the time that the taxpayer wrote the options, the market price of the stock had risen from $110 to $120 per share.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 243 of the Code allows a corporation a deduction for certain amounts received as dividends from a domestic corporation.

Section 246(c)(1)(A) provides that no deduction shall be allowed under section 243 in respect of any dividend on any share of stock that is sold or otherwise disposed of in any case in which the taxpayer has held such share for 15 days or less.

The flush language of section 246(c)(3) of the Code and the Income Tax Regulations thereunder provide that, for purposes of section 246(c)(1)(A), the taxpayer's holding period in stock shall be appropriately reduced (in the manner provided in the regulations) for any interval (during such period) in which the taxpayer has an option to sell, is under a contractual obligation to sell, or has made (and not closed) a short sale of substantially identical stock or securities.

Neither the Code nor the regulations specifically mentions call options. Therefore, it is necessary to determine whether the sale of such options is equivalent to any of the transactions listed in flush language.

The sale of a call option does not create in the seller an option to sell the underlying stock since consummation of the stock sale is under control of the person to whom the call was sold. See Rev. Rul. 58-234, 1958-1 C.B. 279. Furthermore, the sale of a call option is not a short sale since it is the sale of the right to acquire stock rather than the sale of the stock itself. See Provst v. United States, 269 U.S. 443 (1925), T.D. 3811, V-1 C.B. 417 (1926). Finally, although the writing of a call option on stock owned could be deemed to be a contractual obligation to sell, the legislative history of section 246(c) indicates that, for purposes of section 246(c)(3), it is not.

The flush language of section 246(c)(3) was enacted to reduce a taxpayer's holding period for any interval during which the taxpayer is in both a "long" and a "short" position. S. Rep. No. 1983, 85th Cong., 2nd Sess. 28-9 (1958), 1958-3 C.B. 922, 949-50. This insures that the taxpayer is at the risk of the market for the entire holding period. See section 1.246-3(d)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations.

The writing of call options on stock owned affords the writer no protection against loss, beyond the option price received, in the event the underlying stock declines in value. Therefore, since the writing of these options does not place the writer in a risk-free position, it does not come within the intendment of the statute. Such considerations, however, are not applicable to "in-the-money" call options, that is, call options that are sold with a striking price below the market price of the underlying stock on the date that the option is written, since in such a situation the exercise of such options may be virtually guaranteed and the element of risk is either greatly reduced or eliminated.

HOLDING

The writing of a call option by a taxpayer on stock held by the taxpayer does not reduce the holding period required by section 246(c)(1)(A) of the Code for purposes of the allowance of the deduction for dividends received provided by section 243.

Section 301.—Distributions of Property

26 CFR 1.301-1: Rules applicable with respect to distributions of money and other property.
(Also Sections 304, 351; 1.304-2, 1.351-2.)

Transfer of assets to new corporation; stock for cash and stock. An individual who owned all the stock of a corporation transferred the stock to a new corporation in exchange for all of its stock and cash that was borrowed from a bank. Subsequent to the transfer the new corporation repaid the loan with funds received from the first corporation. The cash received by the individual constitutes a dividend from the old corporation to the extent provided in section 301 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-239

ISSUE

Does section 301(c) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to the transaction described below?

FACTS

Individual A owned all of the stock of corporation X, which is engaged in a profitable manufacturing business. Over the years, X has accumulated substantial earnings and profits but had never paid a dividend. A decided to broaden the business operations of X into other unrelated manufacturing endeavors, and to this end A determined that a holding company would be necessary to oversee and control a multifaceted operation. A also wanted to initiate some new business ventures as a sole proprietor but did not have the necessary cash without withdrawing funds from X. To accomplish these objectives, A transferred the stock of X to Y, a newly created corporation. In exchange, therefor, A received the stock of Y and 100,000*x* dollars that Y had borrowed from a bank. The obligation of Y to the bank was guaranteed by X and secured by a pledge of the X stock to be received pursuant to the overall transaction. Subsequent to the transaction, Y repaid the bank loan with funds received from X.

LAW, ANALYSIS, AND HOLDING

Section 351(a) of the Code provides, in part, that no gain or loss will be recognized if property is transferred to a corporation by one or more persons solely in exchange for stock or securities in such corporation and immediately after the exchange such person or persons are in control (as defined in section 368(c)) of the corporation.

Section 368(c) of the Code provides that the term "control" means the ownership of stock possessing at least 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of the corporation.

Section 351(b)(1) of the Code provides that if section 351 (a) would apply to an exchange but for the fact that there is received, in addition to the stock or securities permitted to be received under subsection (a), other property or money, then gain (if any) to such recipient will be recognized, but not in excess of the money received, plus the fair market value of such other property received. Under section 351(b)(1), the other property or money is treated as received by the shareholder in part or full payment in exchange for the assets transferred. Section 351(b)(2) provides that no loss will be recognized.

Section 1.351-2(d) of the regulations refers to section 301 of the Code with respect to the taxation of dividends where a distribution by a corporation of its stock in connection with an exchange subject to section 351(a) has the effect of the distribution of a taxable dividend.

Section 1.301-1(l) of the regulations provides that a distribution to shareholders with respect to their stock is within the terms of section 301 of the Code although it takes place at the same time as another transaction if the distribution is in substance a separate transaction whether or not connected in a formal sense.

Section 304(a)(1) of the Code provides, in part, that where one or more persons are in control, as defined in section 304(c), of each of two corporations and, in return for property, one of the corporations acquires stock in the other corporation from the person or persons so in control, the property received will be treated under section 302 as a distribution in redemption of stock of the corporation acquiring such stock. Section 304(c) provides, in part, that control means the ownership of stock possessing at least 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote, or at least 50 percent of the total value of shares of all classes of stock.

Section 351 of the Code applies to the transfer by A of the X stock to Y in exchange for the Y stock because A was in control of Y (as defined in section 368(c)) immediately after the exchange. It must be determined, however, whether section 351(b) or section 304(a)(1) applies to the cash received by A from Y in the transaction.

A distribution of the cash directly by X to A would have been a distribution within the terms of section 301 of the Code. Although in the present case the cash distribution was arranged to be made by newly-organized Y corporation, this part of the transaction was in substance a disguised dividend distribution from X to A. The characterization of a distribution is not necessarily determinative for tax purposes and may be recharacterized to accord with the substance of a transaction. See Waterman Steamship Corp. v. Commissioner, 430 F.2d 1185 (5th Cir. 1970). Thus, the receipt of the 100,000*x* dollars by A is not governed under the provisions of section 351(b)(1) of the Code. See sections 1.351-2(d) and 1.301-1(l) of the regulations. Also, the provisions of section 304(a)(1) do not have any application to this situation since the substance of the transaction involves no actual receipt by A of "property" (cash) that is required to be distributed by Y, the acquiring-transferee corporation.

A distribution by one person (X) cannot be transformed for tax purposes into a distribution by another (Y) by using the latter as a conduit through which to pass the 100,000*x* dollars. Consequently, A will be treated as having received a dividend of 100,000*x* dollars from X to the extent provided in section 301 of the Code. See Gold v. Commissioner, T.C.M. 1958-2. Also see Minesota Tea Co. v. Helvering, 302 U.S. 609 (1938), Ct. D. 1305, 1938-1 C.B. 288, and Higgins v. Smith, 308 U.S. 473 (1940), Ct. D. 1434, 1940-1 C.B. 127.

Transfer of assets to new corporation; liabilities assumed. In order to acquire indirect ownership of a bank through a bank holding company and to satisfy the appropriate banking rules and regulations, an individual borrowed money from an unrelated financial institution to acquire 90 percent of the bank's stock and acquired the remaining stock with personal funds. The individual then formed a new bank holding company and immediately transferred all of the bank's stock to it in exchange for all of the holding company's stock and the holding company's assumption of the individuals' acquisition indebtedness. Section 351(a) of the Code applies to the transfer, the individual is treated as a mere intermediate agent employed solely to satisfy non-tax rules and regulations, and the assumption of the indebtedness is disregarded.

ISSUE

Does section 351(a) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to the transaction described below?

FACTS

X is a corporation engaged in the general banking business that has solely common stock outstanding. In order to acquire indirect ownership of X through a bank holding company and to satisfy the appropriate banking rules and regulations, A, an individual who previously owned no X stock, devised the following plan. A first borrowed money from an unrelated financial institution B to acquire ninety percent of the X stock, pledging the X stock as security. A acquired the remaining 10 percent of X stock with his personal funds. A then formed Y, a new corporation, to be operated as a bank holding company, and immediately transferred all the X stock to Y. In exchange therefor, Y issued to A all of its stock and assumed the indebtedness incurred by A. The assumption by Y was done with the agreement of B and operated to release A from any liability with respect to the borrowed funds.

LAW AND ANALYSIS AND HOLDING

Section 351(a) of the Code provides, in part, that no gain or loss will be recognized if property is transferred to a corporation by one or more persons solely in exchange for stock or securities in such corporation and immediately after the exchange such person or persons are in control (as defined in section 368(c)) of the Code.

Section 368(c) of the Code provides that the term "control" means the ownership of stock possessing at least 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of the corporation.

Section 304(a)(1) of the Code provides, in part, that where one or more persons are in control, as defined in section 304(c), of each of two corporations and, in return for property, one of the corporations acquires stock in the other corporation from the person or persons so in control, the property received will be treated under section 302 as a distribution in redemption of stock of the corporation acquiring such stock. Section 304(c) provides, in part, that control means the ownership of stock possessing at least 50 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote, or at least 50 percent of the total value of shares of all classes of stock.

Section 357(a) provides, in part, that, except as provided in sections 357(b) and (c), if (1) the taxpayer receives property that would be permitted to be received under section 351 without the recognition of gain if it were the sole consideration, and (2) as part of the consideration, another party to the exchange assumes a liability of the taxpayer, or acquires from the taxpayer property subject to a liability, then such assumption or acquisition shall not be treated as money or other property, and shall not prevent the exchange from being within the provisions of section 351.

Section 351 of the Code applies to the transfer by A of the X stock to Y in exchange for the Y stock because A was in control of Y (as defined in section 368(c)) immediately after the exchange. It must be determined, however, whether section 357(a) or section 304(a)(1) applies to the assumption by Y of the indebtedness incurred by A in the transaction.

If A had first formed Y and then had caused Y to borrow money from B so that Y would have directly acquired the 90 percent of the shares of X stock, there would have been no need for an assumption of the indebtedness by Y. In substance, there was no plan or intention for A to either own the X stock, or to repay the loan proceeds which were used to acquire that stock. Thus, for federal income tax purposes, A will be treated for this part of the transaction as a mere intermediate agent employed solely to satisfy non-tax related rules and regulations and the assumption of the indebtedness will be disregarded. See Ciaio v. Commissioner, 47 T.C. 447 (1967), acq., 1967-2 C.B. 2 and Fox v. Harrison, 145 F.2d 521 (7th Cir. 1944). Consequently, neither section 357(a) of the Code nor section 304(a)(1) have any application to the transaction since there is no assumption of a liability and also no "property" is distributed by Y, the acquiring-transferee corporation, within the meaning of section 304(a)(1).

ISSUE

What are the federal income tax consequences of the acquisition of stock pursuant to the exercise of a nonqualified stock option, if payment for the stock is made with shares of the same corporation's stock that were previously acquired pursuant to the exercise of a qualified stock option?

FACTS

A corporation, whose outstanding stock consists of a single class of common stock, has a qualified stock option plan described in section 422 of the Internal Revenue Code and a nonqualified stock option plan. An optionee who exercises an option granted under the nonqualified plan may pay for the shares (1) in cash, (2) with previously acquired shares having a fair market value equal to the option price, or (3) with cash and previously acquired shares having a fair market value less than the option price.

On May 1, 1977, an employee of the corporation exercised a qualified stock option and acquired 1,000 shares of stock for 2*x* dollars. The fair market value of the stock steadily increased, and on July 1, 1979, when the employee exercised a nonqualified option (which was granted after April 21, 1969, and did not have a readily ascertainable fair market value when granted) for 2,000 shares of stock, the 1,000 shares of stock acquired pursuant to the qualified option had a fair market value of 6*x* dollars. The employee paid for the 2,000 shares of stock received pursuant to the nonqualified option with the 1,000 shares of identical stock acquired in 1977 when the employee exercised the qualified option. The nonqualified option price for the 2,000 shares of stock was 6*x* dollars; however, the fair market value was 12*x* dollars. Thus, the employee exchanged 1,000 shares of stock with a basis of 2*x* dollars and a fair market value of 6*x* dollars for 2,000 shares of stock with a fair market value of 12*x* dollars.

LAW

Section 421(a)(1) of the Code provides that if a share of stock is transferred to an individual in a transfer in respect of which the requirements of section 422(a) are met, no income results when the share is transferred to the individual upon the exercise of the option with respect to that share.

Section 422(a) of the Code provides that section 421(a) applies with respect to the transfer of a share of stock to an individual pursuant to the exercise of a qualified stock option if no disposition of the share is made by the employee within the three-year period beginning on the day after the day of the transfer of the share.

Section 1.421-8(b) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a disposition of a share of stock, acquired by the exercise of a statutory option, before the expiration of the applicable holding period, makes section 421 of the Code inapplicable to the transfer of the share. The income attributable to the transfer is treated by the individual as income received in the taxable year in which the disposition occurs.

Section 1.421-8(b)(2) of the regulations provides that section 421 of the Code is not made inapplicable by a transfer before the expiration of the applicable holding period if the transfer is not a disposition of stock as defined in section 425(c).

Section 425(c) of the Code provides that the term "disposition" includes a sale, exchange, gift, or a transfer of legal title, but does not include an exchange to which section 1036 applies.

Section 1036(a) of the Code provides that no gain or loss shall be recognized if common stock in a corporation is exchanged solely for common stock in the same corporation, or if preferred stock in a corporation is exchanged solely for preferred stock in the same corporation.

Section 1031(d) of the Code provides that if property is acquired in an exchange described in section 1036(a), the basis shall be the same as that of the property exchanged.

Section 83(a) of the Code provides that, if, in connection with the performance of services, property is transferred to any person other than the person for whom such services are performed, the excess of (1) the fair market value of the property at the first time the rights of the person having the beneficial interest in the property are transferable or are not subject to a substantial risk of forfeiture, whichever occurs earlier, over (2) the amount (if any) paid for the property, is included in the gross income of the person who performed the services.

Section 83(e) of the Code provides that section 83 does not apply to the transfer of an option without a readily ascertainable fair market value. However, under section 1.83-7(a) of the regulations, if such option is exercised, section 83(a) applies to the transfer of property pursuant to the exercise, and the employee realizes compensation upon the transfer at the time and in the amount determined under section 83(a).

The exercise of the nonqualified stock option caused the realization of 6*x* dollars of income under section 83(a) of the Code.

(1) The exchange of 6*x* dollars in value of common stock (1,000 shares) for 6*x* dollars in value of common stock (1,000 shares) qualifies for nonrecognition of gain under section 1036 of the Code. Pursuant to section 1031(d), the employee-shareholder's basis in this 1,000 shares of stock received pursuant to the exercise of the nonqualified option is the same as the employee-shareholder's basis in the 1,000 shares of stock exchanged therefor (2*x* dollars). Therefore, a disposition within the meaning of section 425(c) did not occur because section 1036 applies to the exchange of the 1,000 shares of stock that were acquired in 1977 pursuant to the exercise of the qualified option, and the employee-shareholder did not receive income pursuant to section 1.421-8(b) of the regulations.

(2) The additional 1,000 shares of common stock received by the employee-shareholder are compensation for services under section 83(a) of the Code. Accordingly, the employee-shareholder must include in gross income the fair market value (6*x* dollars) of the additional 1,000 shares of stock received pursuant to the exercise of the nonqualified stock option. The employee-shareholder's basis in the additional 1,000 shares of stock is the same as the amount included in gross income (6*x* dollars).

Jointly held property; divorce. A spouse purchased real property with separate funds and took title in the names of both spouses either as tenants by the entirety or as joint tenants with right of survivorship. In a state where a subsequent divorce converts a tenancy by the entirety or a joint tenancy into a tenancy in common, such a divorce would result in a gift of one-half the value of the property. In a state where a joint tenancy is not terminated by divorce, no gift results. Upon the contributor's death more than three years after the divorce the portion of the property that was not considered a gift is includible in the contributor's gross estate.

Rev. Rul. 80-241

ISSUE

What is the proper application of section 2040(a) and section 2515 of the Internal Revenue Code if property was held by the decedent and decedent's spouse as tenants by the entirety, or in the alternative, as joint tenants with right of survivorship and the decedent is divorced prior to death.

FACTS

Situation 1

In 1970, A purchased real property for 100*x* dollars and took title in the names of A and B, as tenants by the entirety. The property was located in State X, the jurisdiction where A and B resided. A provided the entire consideration for the property, and A did not elect under section 2515(c) of the Code to treat the creation of the tenancy by the entirety as a gift to B. Under the laws of State X, a tenancy by the entirety, unlike a joint tenancy, cannot be unilaterally severed.

In 1972 A and B were divorced. Prior to divorce, A and B did not execute a written agreement relative to their marital and property rights. The divorce decree did not contain any provision regarding the partition and disposition of the real property. However, it did provide for periodic support payments to B. A died in 1976.

The laws of State X provide that upon the dissolution of a marriage by divorce, a tenancy by the entirety is converted by operation of law into a tenancy in common. Each party then own an undivided one-half interest in the property. See for example, Hendel v. Hendel, 44 App. Div. 2d 532, 353 N.Y.S. 2d 454 (1974); McIntyre v. McIntyre, 377 S.W. 2d 421 (Mo. 1964); Bernatavicius v. Bernatavicius, 259 Mass. 486, 156 N.E. 685 (1927).

The facts are the same as in Situation 1 except that title to the property was originally taken in the names of A and B, as joint tenants with right of survivorship. Situation 2 will consider two possible dispositions of the property under state law, as follows:

1. The laws of State X provide that if property is held by a husband and wife as joint tenants, the joint tenancy is not affected if the parties are divorced. If the divorce decree or separation agreement does not provide for the disposition of the joint property, the property continues to be held by the parties as joint tenants after the divorce. See, Bradley v. Mann, 34 Colo. App. 135, 525 P. 2d 492 (1974), aff'd 535 P. d 213 (1975); Summerlin v. Bowden, 286 Ala. 391, 240 So. 2d 356 (1970); Nichols v. Nichols, 43 Wisc. 2d 346, 168 N.W. 2d 876 (1996); Witzel v. Witzel, 386 P. 2d 103 (Wyo. 1963).

2. The laws of State X provide that if the divorce decree or separation agreement does not provide for the disposition of the joint property, then the joint tenancy is converted by operation of law into a tenancy in common. See for example, Ramirez v. Ramirez, 309 So. 2d 25 (Fla. 1975); Smith v. Smith, 169 N.E. 2d 130 (Ind. 1960).

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2033 of the Code includes in the gross estate the value of all property to the extent of the decedent's interest in the property.

Section 2040(a) of the Code provides the general rule that the decedent's gross estate shall include the entire value of property held by the decedent as a joint tenant with right of survivorship, or as a tenant by the entirety, except to the extent that the value of the property is attributable to consideration in money or money's worth furnished by the other joint tenant. See, section 2040(b) of the Code, which was added by the Tax Reform Act of 1976, Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 331, for an exception to the general rule of section 2040(a) in a situation in which the creation of tenancy by the entirety or joint tenancy in real property was treated as a gift under section 2515.

The creation of a joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety in real property is generally considered a gift, for gift tax purposes. However, section 2515(a) provides that the creation of a tenancy by the entirety, or a joint tenancy, in real property by one spouse is not considered a transfer for purposes of the gift tax unless the donor elects to have the transfer treated as a gift. If the donor does not elect to treat the creation of the tenancy as a gift, then pursuant to section 2515(b), the termination of the tenancy other than by reason of the death of a spouse is a gift, ". . . to the extent that the proportion of the total consideration furnished by such spouses multiplied by the proceeds of such termination (whether in form of cash, property, or interests in property) exceeds the value of such proceeds of termination received by such spouse."

Section 25.2515-1(d)(2) of the Gift Tax Regulations defines the term "termination" as follows:

> . . . [A] termination of a tenancy is effected when all or a portion of the property so held by the spouses is sold, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of, by gift or in any other manner, or when the spouses, through any form of conveyance or agreement become tenants in common of the property or > otherwise alter the nature of their respective interests in the property. . . .

In Situation 1, above, upon the issuance of the final court decree the tenancy by the entirety was terminated by operation of law. This termination would be subject to the gift tax. At the time of A's death, the property is not subject to the provisions of section 2040, because the property is not held as a tenancy by the entirety, or a joint tenancy. Only the value of A's undivided one-half interest as a tenant in common is includible in A's gross estate under section 2033 of the Code.

In Situation 2, the property was initially purchased in the names of A and B as joint tenants with right of survivorship. If, under applicable state law the property continues to be held by the parties as joint tenants after the divorce, then upon A's death, section 2040 would be applicable in determining the estate taxation of the property. Since in the situation presented, the entire value of the property is attributable to consideration in money or money's worth furnished by A, the entire value of the property on the date of A's death is includible in A's gross estate pursuant to section 2040 of the Code. Further, since the property ownership remained in joint tenancy form there would be no termination for purposes of section 2515, even though the joint tenants are no longer married.

If, on the other hand, state law provided that upon divorce the joint tenancy was converted to a tenancy in common, then only the value of A's interest in the property after the divorce, that is, an undivided one-half interest as a tenant in common, is includible in A's gross estate under section 2033 of the Code. The provisions of section 2040 would not apply to the property interest. Also, the conversion of the joint tenancy into a tenancy in common would be considered a termination subject to the gift tax, under section 2515(b) of the Code.

HOLDINGS

1. Situation 1, when, upon divorce, the tenancy by the entirety is converted into a tenancy in common one-half of the value of the property is subject to the gift tax under section 2515. Upon A's death, only the value of an undivided one-half interest as a tenant in common in the property is includible in A's gross estate under section 2033 of the Code.

2. In Situation 2, if the joint tenancy remains a joint tenancy after the divorce, then pursuant to section 2040, the entire value of the property on the date of A's death is includible in A's gross estate. If, in Situation 2, the property was converted to a tenancy in common upon divorce, then one-half the value of the property is subject to the gift tax at the time, and only the value of an undivided one-half interest as a tenant in common in the property is includible in A's gross estate under section 2033.

Material Participation Requirements for Valuation of Certain Farm and Closely Held Business Real Property and Method of Valuing Farm Real Property According to Actual Use

Procedure For Various Estate Tax Elections under the Tax Reform Act of 1976

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to material participation requirements for and the method of valuing certain farm real property according to actual use. The document also contains final regulations on the procedure for electing the use valuation, for electing to extend payment of estate tax attributable to interests in closely held businesses, and for electing a special lien in lieu of personal liability for certain deferred amounts of estate tax as well as final regulations on material participation rules for certain tenants and owners of farms for self-employment income tax purposes. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] and the Act of August 7, 1974 (Pub. L. 93-368, [1974-2 C.B. 418], 88 Stat. 422). The regulations provide the public with the guidance needed to comply with those Acts. They affect farm owners and tenants, and estates comprised largely of farm and other closely-held business interests.

DATES: The regulations are effective as follows:

(1) For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1973, in the case of the provisions defining net earnings from self-employment; and

(2) For estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976, in the case of the provisions on valuation of farm and closely held business real property, on extension of time to pay estate tax and on the special lien in lieu of personal liability for certain amounts of estate tax.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On July 13, 1978, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Estate Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 20) relating to procedures for making the elections provided under sections 2032A, 6166, and 6324A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 ("Code") (43 FR 30070). On December 21, 1978, amendments to these July 13, 1978, proposed regulations were published in the Federal Register (43 FR 59517). On July 19, 1978, the Federal Register published proper amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under section 1402 (a) of the Code and to the Estate Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 20) under section 2032A of the Code (43 FR 31039). On September 10, 1979, a portion, proposed § 20.2032A-4(b), of the July 19, 1978, proposed regulations was withdrawn by notice published in the Federal Register (43 FR 52698). Also on September 10, 1979, the Federal Register published new proposed regulations under section 2032A replacing the withdrawn proposal (44 FR 52696). All of these regulations were proposed to conform the regulations to section 10(b) of the Act of August 7, 1974 (Pub. L. 93-368 [1974-2 C.B. 418], 88 Stat. 422) and to sections 2003(a) and 2004(a) and (d) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (Pub. L. 94-455 [1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], 90 Stat. 1856, 1868).

A public hearing on the July 13, July 19, and December 21, 1978, proposed regulations was held on April 3, 1979. A public hearing was held on the September 10, 1979, proposed regulations on January 16, 1980. After consideration of all written and oral comments regarding the proposed amendments, final regulations are adopted by this Treasury decision.

Net Earnings from Self-Employment

Section 1402(a)(1) of the Code, as amended in 1974, defines more narrowly the circumstances in which the owner or tenant of land must include farm rentals in self-employment income, which is subject to social security tax. Farm rentals are considered self-employment income when three requirements are met. First, the owner or tenant must arrange for another individual to farm the land. Second, that arrangement must contemplate material participation by the owner or tenant in the operation of the farm. Third, the owner or tenant must in fact participate materially in the operation of the farm.

Consistent with the various court decisions rendered prior to the enactment of Public Law 93-368, the existing regulations provide that the actions of an employee or agent will be attributed to the owner or tenant in determining whether the three requirements for material participation have been met. Thus, owners or tenants of land who arranged with agents (such as professional farm management companies) to manage and supervise the farming of their land had to include the rentals they received in their self-employment income. This was so even though they did not personally participate in the farming operation at all. As a result of this rule, many persons who thought they were merely receiving investment income found themselves liable for social security taxes.

The amendment changed the rule as to agents and employees for years beginning after 1973. Thus, activities of agents and employees are no longer taken into account in determining under section 1402 whether an owner or tenant has materially participated in the farming operation.

Material Participation and Estate Tax Valuation

Code section 2032A allows an executor to elect to value qualified real property used in farming or other closely-held business activity based upon its qualified use rather than its fair market value determined under otherwise applicable estate tax rules. That section requires, however, that the owner or a member of the owner's family materially participate in the operation of the farm or other business for specified periods both before and after the decedent's death.

Along with property owned individually by the decedent, real property owned by a qualified closely-held corporation or partnership or by a trust is permitted to be specially valued for determining the value of the decedent's interest in that business. The regulations provide that where the property is owned in this manner, the participating owner or family member may be an employee rather than be self-employed. Even though the participants are not self-employed, material participation is tested by viewing their activities as if they were self-employed.

Participation is judged in light of actual personal involvement by the decedent and family members. If the involvement occurs on less than a full-time basis, it must be pursuant to an arrangement entered into by the participant (or a member of the participant's family) calling for the activities that occur. Acts of an agent or an employee are not considered in determining whether material participation occurs unless the agent or employee is also a family member.

Material participation, if other than by full-time employment, means a regular process of consultation and inspection with active involvement in making management decisions. Advancing funds or assuming financial responsibility for the business operation are also required. Maintaining one's principal place of residence on the premises in the case of a farm or hotel is a factor in determining the degree of participation.

With corporations and partnerships, activities in the management and operation of the real estate component of the business as a whole are central. Merely holding corporate offices or being a partner in name and financial risk only is not sufficient participation. This is true even where an inactive partner returns his or her distributive share as earnings from self-employment and pays social security taxes on it. Finally, activities which are not contemplated by the required arrangement are not considered in determining whether material participation occurs.

Method of Valuing Farm Real Property under Section 2032A(e)(7)

Section 2032(e)(7) provides a special method for valuing qualified real property used for farming purposes. This method requires the executor to locate tracts of comparable real property which are rented solely for cash. A 5-year average of gross cash rentals from comparable real property, minus State and local real estate taxes, is then capitalized by the average annual effective interest rate charged by Federal land banks on new agricultural loans to farmers and ranchers. These regulations provide the definitions and other information necessary for valuing property according to this method.

If the section 2032A(e)(7) formula valuation method is used, the executor must document to the Internal Revenue Service the actual comparable property and cash rentals upon which the executor relies. If no such rentals are found, the executor may still value the farm real property based upon its current use under the provisions of section 2032A(e)(8).

The rules for valuing real property under section 2032A(e)(7) provided in these regulations apply only to estates where the specially valued real property is directly owned by the decedent. Regulations will be published at a later date detailing the applicability of this valuation method to property owned indirectly through a trust, a partnership, or a corporation.

Election of Use Valuation

The executor must elect special use valuation by attaching a notice of election to a timely filed estate tax return. Normally, this election is irrevocable; however, elections which are timely made on or before August 30, 1980, may be revoked during the 6-month period following that date (or any lesser period remaining before expiration of the statute of limitations). A revocation is to be accompanied by payment of any additional estate tax found due, plus interest.

An agreement signed by all parties with an interest in the property subject to the special use valuation election is also required under section 2032A. This agreement must accompany the notice of election.

Section 20.2032A-8 defines a person with an interest in the property to include all persons in being as of the date of death of the decedent who receive any vested or contingent interest in the property, who receive a power of appointment over the property, who are beneficiaries of a gift over in default of exercise of any such power, or who, under applicable state law, have any legal right which could affect the ultimate disposion of the property.

Alternate Extension of Time for Payment of Estate Tax

Section 6166 allows an executor to elect to defer payment of a percentage of the total estate tax, including the amount of certain deficiencies. The maximum percentage of tax which may be deferred corresponds to the percentage of the adjusted gross estate which is comprised of a closely held business interest (as defined in section 6166(b)(1)).

Normally, the election is made at the time the estate tax return is filed; however, an election may subsequently be made to pay certain deficiencies in installments. Additionally, where the executor is uncertain as to whether the estate needs to defer payment of tax, a protective election may be made when the estate tax return is filed. If a protective election is made, the final election is to be made within 60 days after final values causing the estate to qualify are determined (or agreed to following examination of a return).

Special Lien for Deferred Amount of Estate Tax

Section 6324A allows the executor of a decedent's estate to elect a lien in favor of the United States in lieu of bond or personal liability if an election under section 6166 or section 6166A is made. The election under section 6324A will not be effective unless all parties having an interest in the property subject to the lien sign an agreement in which they consent to the creation of the lien. The agreement must be filed with the notice of election of the lien. The election may be filed at any time prior to payment of the full amount of the estate tax.

ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATIONS

These regulations are needed in order to provide guidance to the public as well as to government employees responsible for implementation of sections 1402(a), 2032A, 6166, and 6324A of the Code. Considering both the direct and indirect effects of these regulations, it is believed that they satisfactorily implement section 10(b) of the Act of August 7, 1974 (Pub. L. 93-368 [1974-2 C.B. 418]), and sections 2003(a) and 2004(a) and (d) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 332, 338]. Evaluation of the effectiveness of the regulations after issuance will be based upon comments received from offices within the Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department, from other government agencies and from members of the public.

PUBLIC COMMENTS

Seventy-three comments were received in response to the four notices of proposed rulemaking. Two comments urged attributing activities of employees, but not agents, to owners for purposes of meeting both the social security and use valuation material participation requirements. This suggestion was rejected because employees are agents of their employer.

Several comments urged an express statement that use valuation under section 2032A is available even if farming is the only potential use for the real property. Sections 20.2032A-3(a) and 20.2032A-8(a) were changed to reflect this position once the Treasury learned that section 2032A(e)(7) produces land values below even a true current use value and that inequities would result between suburban and strictly rural farms if the limitation were retained. Section 20.2032A-3(b) was changed to clarify that directly owned real property which is passively leased to the decedent's active closely held business (under section 6166(b)(1)) can be qualified property despite the passive lease. A new paragraph (b)(2) was added to § 20.2032A-3 to clarify the treatment of farm buildings as specially valued property under section 2032A.

Section 20.2032A-3(c) was changed in response to the comments to clarify that material participation must occur during periods totalling at least 5 calendar years before and after death and to provide rules under section 2032A(c) for property in which the heirs receive undivided or successive interests. In response to a commentor's question, § 20.2032A-3(c) now also states that simultaneous activities of multiple family members cannot be aggregated to find material participation. Rather, the activities of at least one family member, viewed alone, must constitute material participation at any given time. A statement was also added to clarify that no exception to the material participation requirements is made for periods when real property is owned by the decedent's estate. A new paragraph (d) was added to § 20.2032A-3 to answer questions raised by commentors about property acquired less than 5 years before death and real property, ownership of which is changed from direct to indirect in a nontaxable transfer under section 351 or 721 of the Code during that 5-year period. Proposed § 20.2032A-3(d) on activities required for material participation was renumbered § 20.2032A-3(e) and was modified to state that furnishing of farm equipment by a lessor is not a requirement. The same section now contains an expanded discussion of the relationship of material participation under sections 2032A and 1402(a)(1). Briefly stated, the rule is that payment of self-employment taxes alone is not conclusive as to the presence of material participation. However, when self-employment taxes have not been paid, material participation is presumed not to have occurred unless the executor supplies proof that such participation did in fact occur and demonstrates to the Internal Revenue Service why no such taxes were paid. In addition, any such taxes (plus interest and penalties) determined to be due must be paid.

A new sentence was added to paragraph (e) to reiterate that retention of a farm manager will not automatically disqualify a farm from special use valuation. Clarifying language was also added to that paragraph concernin activities necessary for material participation during nonproducing seasons.

Timber growers requested an explanation of the application of section 2032A to timber farms. A new example (7) has been added to § 20.2032A-3(g) in response to these comments. The example applies the material participation rules to a timber farm.

On September 10, 1979, the definition of gross cash rental contained in the originally published § 20.2032A-4(b) was withdrawn and reproposed. The reproposed section requires executors to rely on actual tracts of comparable property rented solely for cash in valuing farm real property under section 2032A(e)(7). That proposal also specified that state-wide averages of rentals and appraisals cannot be used to value property under section 2032(e)(7). After consideration of all oral and written comments, the Treasury believes that there is no statutory basis for changing the rule as proposed in the Federal Register for September 10, 1979 (44 FR 52696).

Therefore, the final regulations adopt the position proposed on September 10, 1979. If comparable property rented solely for cash is not demonstrated by the executor for all specially valued property, all such property must be valued under section 2032A(e)(8).

Proposed § 20.2032A-8(a) required special use valuation elections to be made on a timely filed estate tax return. Several comments suggested accepting elections first made upon examination of a return. The requested suggestion was not adopted because of statutory restrictions. Several commentors asked that the final regulations include a rule on elections to specially value less than all qualified real property. A new § 20.2032A-8(a)(2) is added to the regulations permitting such partial elections, provided property sufficient to satisfy the statutory thresholds of section 2032A(b)(1)(B) and (C) is specially valued. Paragraph (a)(2) was also modified in response to the public comments to require a statement that specially valued property was owned at least 5 years before the date of the decedent's death rather than the date of acquisition. Further, the request for identification of periods of no material participation and use for farming purposes was restricted to the 8 years preceding the death.

Section 20.2032A-8(b) was changed in response to the comments to make clear that protective elections can be made even if tax is initially due and the estate qualifies based upon returned values.

A witness at the public hearing asked that final regulations include a statement on the duties of the agent designated in the areement to the section 2032A election. Section 20.2032A-8(c) was amended to specify that the agent must have satisfactory evidence of authority to act for the parties to the agreement required under section 2032A(a)(1)(B) and (d)(2) and to indicate the agent's duties. The requirement that certain creditors sign the agreement, contained in proposed § 20.2032A-8(c)(2), was deleted.

Proposed § 20.6166-1(d) was amended to delete any implied limitations on the circumstances in which a protective election can be made. The new rule is consistent with that for protective elections under section 2032A.

Proposed § 20.6324A-1 was rewritten as a cross-reference to new § 301.6324A-1 with the substantive rules contained in proposed § 20.6324A-1 being adopted as §301.6324A-1. This change was made to achieve consistency with other regulations on liens for taxes.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is H. B. Hartley of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, amendments to the regulations (26 CFR Parts 1, 20, and 301), are hereby adopted as set forth below:

Paragraph 1. Section 1.1402(a) is deleted.

Par. 2. Section 1.1402(a)-4 is amended by revising paragraph (b)(5) and by revising examples (5) and (6) in paragraph (b)(6) to read as follows:

§ 1.1402(a)-4 Rentals from real estate.

(b) Special rule for "includible farm rental income"— * * *

(5) Employees or agents. An agreement entered into by an employee or agent of an owner or tenant and another person is considered to be an arrangement entered into by the owner or tenant for purposes of satisfying the requirement set forth in paragraph (b)(2) that the income must be derived under an arrangement between the owner or tenant and another person. For purposes of determining whether the arrangement satisfies the requirement set forth in paragraph (b)(3) that the parties contemplate that the owner or tenant will materially participate in the production or management of production of a commodity, services which will be performed by an employee or agent of the owner or tenant are not considered to be services which the arrangement contemplates will be performed by the owner or tenant. Services actually performed by such employee or agent are not considered services performed by the owner or tenant in determining the extent to which the owner or tenant has participated in the production or management of production of a commodity. For taxable years beginning before January 1, 1974, contemplated or actual services of an agent or an employee of the owner or tenant are deemed to be contemplated or actual services of the owner or tenant under paragraphs (b)(3) and (b)(4) of this section.

(6) Examples. * * *

Example (5). I owned a farm several miles from the town in which he lived. He rented the farm to J under an arrangement which contemplated I's material participation in the management of production of wheat. I furnished one-half of the seed and fertilizer and all the farm equipment and livestock. He employed K to perform all the services in advising, consulting, and inspecting contemplated by the arrangement. I is not materially participating in the management of production of wheat by J. The work done by I's employee, K, is not attributable to I in determining the extent of I's participation. I's rental income from the arrangement is, therefore, not to be included in computing his net earnings from self-employment. For taxable years beginning before January 1, 1974, however, I's rental income would be includible in those earnings.

Example (6). L, a calendar-year taxpayer, appointed M as his agent to rent his fully equipped farm for 1974. M entered into a rental arrangement with N under which M was to direct the planting of crops, inspect them weekly during the growing season, and consult with N on any problems that might arise in connection with irrigation, etc., while N furnished all the labor needed to grow and harvest the crops. M did in fact fulfill its responsibilities under the arrangement. Although the arrangement entered into by M and N is considered to have been made by L, M's services are not attributable to L, and L's furnishing of a fully equipped farm is insufficient by itself to constitute material participation in the production of the crops. Accordingly, L's rental income from the arrangement is not included in his net earnings from self-employment for that year. For taxable years beginning before January 1, 1974, however, L's rental income would be includible in those earnings.

Par. 3. The following new sections are added following § 20.2032-1.

§ 20.2032A-3 Material participation requirements for valuation of certain farm and closely-held business real property.

(a) In general. Under section 2032A, an executor may, for estate tax purposes, make a special election concerning valuation of qualified real property (as defined in section 2032A (b)) used as a farm for farming purposes or in another trade or business. If this election is made, the property will be valued on the basis of its value for its qualified use in farming or the other trade or business, rather than its fair market value determined on the basis of highest and best use (irrespective of whether its highest and best use is the use in farming or other business). For the special valuation rules of section 2032A to apply, the deceased owner and/or a member of the owner's family (as defined in section 2032A(e)(2)) must materially participate in the operation of the farm or other business. Whether the required material participation occurs is a factual determination, and the types of activities and financial risks which will support such a finding will vary with the mode of ownership of both the property itself and of any business in which it is used. Passively collecting rents, salaries, draws, dividends, or other income from the farm or other business is not sufficient for material participation, nor is merely advancing capital and reviewing a crop plan or other business proposal and financial reports each season or business year.

(b) Types of qualified property—(1) In general. Real property valued under section 2032A must pass from the decedent to a qualified heir or be acquired from the decedent by a qualified heir. The real property may be owned directly or may be owned indirectly through ownership of an interest in a corporation, a partnership, or a trust. However, real property is considered to be qualified real property only if a qualified heir receives or acquires a present interest in the property (determined under section 2503) from the decedent. Where the ownership is indirect, however, the decedent's interest in the business must, in addition to meeting the tests for qualification under section 2032A, qualify under the tests of section 6166(b)(1) as an interest in a closely-held business on the date of the decedent's death and for sufficient other time (combined with periods of direct ownership) to equal at least 5 years of the 8 year period preceding the death. All specially valued property must be used in a trade or business. Directly owned real property that is leased by a decedent to a separate closely held business is considered to be qualified real property, but only if the separate business qualifies as a closely held business under section 6166(b)(1) with respect to the decedent on the date of his or her death and for sufficient other time (combined with periods during which the property was operated as a proprietorship) to equal at least 5 years of the 8 year period preceding the death. For example, real property owned by the decedent and leased to a farming corporation or partnership owned and operated entirely by the decedent and fewer than 15 members of the decedent's family is eligible for special use valuation. Under section 2032A, the term trade or business applies only to an active business such as a manufacturing, mercantile, or service enterprise, or to the raising of agricultural or horticultural commodities, as distinguished from passive investment activities. The mere passive rental of property will not qualify. The decedent must own an equity interest in the farm operation. A trade or business is not necessarily present even though an office and regular hours are maintained for management of income producing assets, as the term "business" is not as broad under section 2032A as under section 162. Additionally, no trade or business is present in the case of activities not engaged in for profit. See section 183.

(2) Structures and other real property improvements. Qualified real property includes residential buildings and other structures and real property improvements occupied or used on a regular basis by the owner or lessee of real property (or by employees of the owner or lessee) for the purpose of operating the farm or other closely held business. A farm residence occupied by the decedent owner of the specially valued property is considered to be occupied for the purpose of operating the farm even though a family member (not the decedent) was the person materially participating in the operation of the farm as required under section 2032A(b)(1)(C).

(c) Period material participation must last. The required participation must last—

(1) For periods totalling 5 years or more during the 8 years immediately preceding the date of the decedent's death; and

(2) For periods totalling 5 years or more during any 8 year period ending after the date of the decedent's death (up to a maximum of 15 years after decedent's death, when the additional estate tax provisions of section 2032A(c) cease to apply).

In determining whether the material participation requirement is satisfied, no exception is made for periods during which real property is held by the decedent's estate. Additionally, contemporaneous material participation by 2 or more family members during a period totalling a year will not result in that year being counted as 2 or more years for purposes of satisfying the requirements of this paragraph (c). Death of a qualified heir (as defined in section 2032A(e)(1)) before the requisite time has passed ends any material participation requirement for that heir's portion of the property as to the original decedent's estate if the heir received a separate, joint or other undivided property interest from the decedent. If qualified heirs receive successive interests in specially valued property (e.g. life estate and remainder interests) from the decedent, the material participation requirement does not end with respect to any part of the property until the death of the last qualified heir (or, if earlier, the expiration of 15 years from the date of the decedent's death). The requirements of section 2032A will fully apply to an heir's estate if an election under this section is made for the same property by the heir's executor. In general, to determine whether the required participation has occurred, brief periods (e.g., periods of 30 days or less) during which there was no material participation may be disregarded. This is so only if these periods were both preceded and followed by substantial periods (e.g., periods of more than 120 days) in which there was uninterrupted material participation. See paragraph (e)(1) of this section which provides a special rule for periods when little or no activity is necessary to manage fully a farm.

(d) Period property must be owned by decedent and family members. Only real property which is actually owned by any combination of the decedent, members of the decedent's family, and qualified closely held businesses for periods totalling at least 5 of the 8 years preceding the date of decedent's death may be valued under section 2032A. For example, replacement property acquired in a like-kind exchange under section 1031 is considered to be owned only from the date on which the replacement property is actually acquired. On the other hand, replacement property acquired as a result of an involuntary conversion in a transfer that would meet the requirements of section 2032A(h) if it occurred after the date of the decedent's death is considered to have been owned from the date in which the involuntarily converted property was acquired. Property transferred from a proprietorship to a corporation or a partnership during the 8-year period ending on the date of the decedent's death is considered to be continuously owned to the extent of the decedent's equity interest in the corporation or partnership if, (1) the transfer meets the requirements of section 351 or 721, respectively, and (2) the decedent's interest in the corporation or partnership meets the requirements for indirectly held property contained in paragraph (b)(1) of this section. Likewise, property transferred to a trust is considered to be continuously owned if the beneficial ownership of the trust property is such that the requirements of section 6166(b)(1)(C) would be so satisfied if the property were owned by a corporation and all beneficiaries having vested interests in the trust were shareholders in the corporation. Any periods following the transfer during which the interest in the corporation, partnership, or trust does not meet the requirements of section 6166(b)(1) may not be counted for purposes of satisfying the ownership requirement of this paragraph (d).

(e) Required activities—(1) In general. Actual employment of the decedent (or of a member of the decedent's family) on a substantially full-time basis (35 hours a week or more) or to any lesser extent necessary personally to manage fully the farm or business in which the real property to be valued under section 2032A is used constitutes material participation. For example, many farming operations require only seasonal activity. Material participation is present as long as all necessary functions are performed even though little or no actual activity occurs during nonproducing seasons. In the absence of this direct involvement in the farm or other business, the activities of either the decedent or family members must meet the standards prescribed in this paragraph and those prescribed in the regulations issued under section 1402(a)(1). Therefore, if the participant (or participants) is self-employed with respect to the farm or other trade or business, his or her income from the farm or other business must be earned income for purposes of the tax on self-employment income before the participant is considered to be materially participating under section 2032A. Payment of the self-employment tax is not conclusive as to the presence of material participation. If no self-employment taxes have been paid, however, material participation is presumed not to have occurred unless the executor demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Internal Revenue Service that material participation did in fact occur and informs the Service of the reason no such tax was paid. In addition, all such taxes (including interest and penalties) determined to be due must be paid. In determining whether the material participation requirement is satisfied, the activities of each participant are viewed separately from the activities of all other participants, and at any given time, the activities of at least one participant must be material. If the involvement is less than full-time, it must be pursuant to an arrangement providing for actual participation in the production or management of production where the land is used by any nonfamily member, or any trust or business entity, in farming or another business. The arrangement may be oral or written, but must be formalized in some manner capable of proof. Activities not contemplated by the arrangement will not support a finding of material participation under section 2032A, and activities of any agent or employee other than a family member may not be considered in determining the presence of material participation. Activities of family members are considered only if the family relationship existed at the time the activities occurred.

(2) Factors considered. No single factor is determinative of the presence of material participation, but physical work and participation in management decisions are the principal factors to be considered. As a minimum, the decedent and/or a family member must regularly advise or consult with the other managing party on the operation of the business. While they need not make all final management decisions alone, the decedent and/or family members must participate in making a substantial number of these decisions. Additionally, production activities on the land should be inspected regularly by the family participant, and funds should be advanced and financial responsibility assumed for a substantial portion of the expense involved in the operation of the farm or other business in which the real property is used. In the case of a farm, the furnishing by the owner or other family members of a substantial portion of the machinery, implements, and livestock used in the production activities is an important factor to consider in finding material participation. With farms, hotels, or apartment buildings, the operation of which qualifies as a trade or business, the participating decedent or heir's maintaining his or her principal place of residence on the premises is a factor to consider in determining whether the overall participation is material. Retention of a professional farm manager will not by itself prevent satisfaction of the material participation requirement by the decedent and family members. However, the decedent and/or a family member must personally materially participate under the terms of arrangement with the professional farm manager to satisfy this requirement.

(f) Special rules for corporations, partnerships, and trusts—(1) Required arrangement. With indirectly owned property as with property that is directly owned, there must be an arrangement calling for material participation in the business by the decedent owner or a family member. Where the real property is indirectly owned, however, even full-time involvement must be pursuant to an arrangement between the entity and the decedent or family member specifying the services to be performed. Holding an office in which certain material functions are inherent may constitute the necessary arrangement for material participation. Where property is owned by a trust, the arrangement will generally be found in one or more of four situations. First, the arrangement may result from appointment as a trustee. Second, the arrangement may result from an employer-employee relationship in which the participant is employed by a qualified closely held business owned by the trust in a position requiring his or her material participation in its activities. Third, the participants may enter into a contract with the trustees to manage, or take part in managing, the real property for the trust. Fourth, where the trust agreement expressly grants the management rights to the beneficial owner, that grant is sufficient to constitute the arrangement required under this section.

(2) Required activities. The same participation standards apply under section 2032A where property is owned by a qualified closely held business as where the property is directly owned. In the case of a corporation, a partnership, or a trust where the participating decedent and/or family members are employees and thereby not subject to self-employment income taxes, they are to be viewed as if they were self-employed, and their activities must be activities that would subject them to self-employment income taxes were they so. Where property is owned by a corporation, a partnership or a trust, participation in the management and operation of the real property itself as a component of the closely held business is the determinative factor. Nominally holding positions as a corporate officer or director and receiving a salary therefrom or merely being listed as a partner and sharing in profits and losses will not alone support a finding of material participation. This is so even though, as partners, the participants pay self-employment income taxes on their distributive shares of partnership earnings under § 1.1402(a)-2. Further, it is especially true for corporate directors in states where the board of directors need not be an actively functioning entity or need only act informally. Corporate offices held by an owner are, however, factors to be considered with all other relevant facts in judging the degree of participation. When real property is directly owned and is leased to a corporation or partnership in which the decedent owns an interest which qualifies as an interest in a trade or business within the meaning of section 6166 (b)(1), the presence of material participation is determined by looking at the activities of the participant with regard to the property in whatever capacity rendered. During any periods when qualified real property is held by an estate, material participation is to be determined in the same manner as if the property were owned by a trust.

(g) Examples. The rules for determining material participation may be illustrated by the following examples. Additional illustrations may be found in examples (1) through (6) in § 1.1402(a)-4.

Example (1). A, the decedent, actively operated his 100-acre farm on a full-time basis for 20 years. He then leased it to B for the 10 years immediately preceding his death. By the terms of the lease, A was to consult with B on where crops were to be planted, to supervise marketing of the crop, and to share equally with B in expenses and earnings. A was present on the farm each spring for consultation; however, once planting was completed, he left for his retirement cottage where he remained until late summer, at which time he returned to the farm to supervise the marketing operation. A at all times maintained the farm home in which he had lived for the time he had owned the farm and lived there when at the farm. In light of his activities, assumption of risks, and valuable knowledge of proper techniques for the particular land gained over 20 years of full-time farming on the land involved, A is deemed to have materially participated in the farming business.

Example (2). D is the 70-year-old widow of farmer C. She lives on a farm for which special valuation has been elected and has lived there for 20 years. D leases the land to E under an arrangement calling for her participation in the operation of the farm. D annually raises a vegetable garden, chickens, and hogs. She also inspects the tobacco fields (which produce approximately 50 percent of the farm income) weekly and informs E if she finds any work that needs to be done. D and E share expenses and income equally. Other decisions such as what fields to plant and when to plant and harvest crops are left to E, but D does occasionally make suggestions. During the harvest season, D prepares and serves meals for all temporary farm help. D is deemed to participate materially in the farm operation based on her farm residence and her involvement with the main money crop.

Example (3). Assume that D in example (2) moved to a nursing home 1 year after her husband's death. E completely operated the farm for her for 6 years following her move. If E is not a member of D's family, material participation ceases when D moves; however, if E is a member of D's family, E's material participation will prevent disqualification even if D owns the property. Further, upon D's death, the section 2032A valuation could be elected for her estate if E were a member of her family and the other requirements of section 2032A were satisfied.

Example (4). F, a qualified heir, owned a specially valued farm. He contracted with G to manage the farm for him as F, a lawyer, lived and worked 15 miles away in a nearby town. F supplied all machinery and equipment and assumed financial responsibility for the expenses of the farm operation. The contract specified that G was to submit a crop plan and a list of expenses and earnings for F's approval. It also called for F to inspect the farm regularly and to approve all expenditures over $100. In practice, F visited the farm weekly during the growing season to inspect and discuss operations. He actively participated in making important management decisions such as what fields to plant or pasture and how to utilize the subsidy program. F is deemed to have materially participated in the farm operation as his personal involvement amounted to more than managing an investment. Had F not regularly inspected the farm and participated in management decisions, however, he would not be considered to be materially participating. This would be true even though F did assume financial responsibility for the operation and did review annual crop plans.

Example (5). Decedent I owned 90 percent of all outstanding stock of X Corporation, a qualified closely-held business which owns real property to be specially valued. I held no formal position in the corporation and there was no arrangement for him to participate in daily business operations. I regularly spent several hours each day at the corporate offices and made decisions on many routine matters. I is not deemed to have materially participated in the X Corporation despite his activity because there was no arrangement requiring him to act in the manner in which he did.

Example (6). Decedent J was a senior partner in the law firm of X, Y, and Z, which is a qualified closely held business owning the building in which its offices are located. J ceased to practice law actively 5 years before his death in 1977; however, he remained a full partner and annually received a share of firm profits. J is not deemed to have materially participated under section 2032A even though he still may have reported his distributive share of partnership income for self-employment income tax purposes if the payments were not made pursuant to any retirement agreement. This is so because J does not meet the requirements of actual personal material participation.

Example (7). K, the decedent, owned a tree farm. He contracted with L, a professional forester, to manage the property for him as K, a doctor, lived and worked in a town 50 miles away. The activities of L are not considered in determining whether K materially participated in the tree farm operation. During the 5 years preceding K's death, there was no need for frequent inspections of the property or consultation concerning it, inasmuch as most of the land had been reforested and the trees were in the beginning stages of their growing cycle. However, once every year, L submitted for K's approval a proposed plan for the management of the property over the next year. K actively participated in making important management decisions, such as where and whether a pre-commercial thinning should be conducted, whether the timber was adequately protected from fire and disease, whether fire lines needed to be plowed around the new trees, and whether boundary lines were properly maintained around the property. K inspected the property at least twice every year and assumed financial responsibility for the expenses of the tree farm. K also reported his income from the tree farm as earned income for purposes of the tax on self-employment income. Over a period of several years, K had harvested and marketed timber from certain tracts of the tree farm and had supervised replanting of the areas where trees were removed. K's history of harvesting, marketing, and replanting of trees showed him to be in the business of tree farming rather than merely passively investing in timber land. If the history of K's tree farm did not show such an active business operation, however, the tree farm would not qualify for special use valuation. In light of all these facts, K is deemed to have materially participated in the farm as his personal involvement amounted to more than managing an investment.

Example (8). Decedent M died on January 1, 1978, owning a farm for which special use valuation under section 2032A has been elected. M owned the farm real property for 15 years before his death. During the 4 years preceding M's death (January 1, 1974 through December 31, 1977), the farm was rented to N, a nonfamily member, and neither M nor any member of his family materially participated in the farming operation. From January 1, 1970, until December 31, 1973, both M and his daughter, O, materially participated in the farming operation. The material participation requirement of section 2032A(b)(1)(C)(ii) is not satisfied because material participation did not occur for periods aggregating at least 5 different years of the 8 years preceding M's death.

§ 20.2032A-4 Method of valuing farm real property.

(a) In general. Unless the executor of the decedent's estate elects otherwise under section 2032A(e)(7)(B)(ii) or fails to document comparable rented farm property meeting the requirements of this section, the value of the property which is used for farming purposes and which is subject to an election under section 2032A is determined by—

(1) Subtracting the average annual state and local real estate taxes on actual tracts of comparable real property in the same locality from the average annual gross cash rental for that same comparable property, and

(2) Dividing the result so obtained by the average annual effective interest rate charged on new Federal land bank loans.

The computation of each average annual amount is to be based on the 5 most recent calendar years ending before the date of the decedent's death.

(b) Gross cash rental—(1) Generally. Gross cash rental is the total amount of cash received for the use of actual tracts of comparable farm real property in the same locality as the property being specially valued during the period of one calendar year. This amount is not diminished by the amount of any expenses or liabilities associated with the farm operation or the lease. See, paragraph (d) of this section for a definition of comparable property and rules for property on which buildings or other improvements are located and farms including multiple property types. Only rentals from tracts of comparable farm property which are rented solely for an amount of cash which is not contingent upon production are acceptable for use in valuing real property under section 2032A(e)(7). The rentals considered must result from an arm's-length transaction as defined in this section. Additionally, rentals received under leases which provide for payment solely in cash are not acceptable as accurate measures of cash rental value if involvement by the lessor (or a member of the lessor's family who is other than a lessee) in the management or operation of the farm to an extent which amounts to material participation under the rules of section 2032A is contemplated or actually occurs. In general, therefore, rentals for any property which qualifies for special use valuation cannot be used to compute gross cash rentals under this section because the total amount received by the lessor does not reflect the true cash rental value of the real property.

(2) Special rules—(i) Documentation required of executor. The executor must identify to the Internal Revenue Service actual comparable property for all specially valued property and cash rentals from that property if the decedent's real property is valued under section 2032A(e)(7). If the executor does not identify such property and cash rentals, all specially valued real property must be valued under the rules of section 2032A(e)(8) if special use valuation has been elected. See, however, § 20.2032A-8(d) for a special rule for estates electing section 2032A treatment on or before August 30, 1980.

(ii) Arm's-length transaction required. Only those cash rentals which result from a lease entered into in an arm's-length transaction are acceptable under section 2032A(e)(7). For these purposes, lands leased from the Federal government, or any state or local government, which are leased for less than the amount that would be demanded by a private individual leasing for profit are not leased in an arm's-length transaction. Additionally, leases between family members (as defined in section 2032A(e)(2)) which do not provide a return on the property commensurate with that received under leases between unrelated parties in the locality are not acceptable under this section.

(iii) In-kind rents, statements of appraised rental value, and area averages. Rents which are paid wholly or partly in kind (e.g., crop shares) may not be used to determine the value of real property under section 2032A(e)(7). Likewise, appraisals or other statements regarding rental value as well as area-wide averages of rentals (i.e., those compiled by the United States Department of Agriculture) may not be used under section 2032A(e)(7) because they are not true measures of the actual cash rental value of comparable property in the same locality as the specially valued property.

(iv) Period for which comparable real property must have been rented solely for cash. Comparable real property rented solely for cash must be identified for each of the five calendar years preceding the year of the decedent's death if section 2032A(e)(7) is used to value the decedent's real property. Rentals from the same tract of comparable property need not be used for each of these 5 years, however, provided an actual tract of property meeting the requirements of this section is identified for each year.

(v) Leases under which rental of personal property is included. No adjustment to the rents actually received by the lessor is made for the use of any farm equipment or other personal property the use of which is included under a lease for comparable real property unless the lease specifies the amount of the total rental attributable to the personal property and that amount is reasonable under the circumstances.

(c) State and local real estate taxes. For purposes of the farm valuation formula under section 2032A(e)(7) state and local taxes are taxes which are assessed by a state or local government and which are allowable deductions under section 164. However, only those taxes on the comparable real property from which cash rentals are determined may be used in the formula valuation.

(d) Comparable real property defined. Comparable real property must be situated in the same locality as the specially valued property. This requirement is not to be viewed in terms of mileage or political divisions alone, but rather is to be judged according to generally accepted real property valuation rules. The determination of properties which are comparable is a factual one and must be based on numerous factors, no one of which is determinative. It will, therefore, frequently be necessary to value farm property in segments where there are different uses or land characteristics included in the specially valued farm. For example, if section 2032A(e)(7) is used, rented property on which comparable buildings or improvements are located must be identified for specially valued property on which buildings or other real property improvements are located. In cases involving multiple areas or land characteristics, actual comparable property for each segment must be used, and the rentals and taxes from all such properties combined (using generally accepted real property valuation rules) for use in the valuation formula given in this section. However, any premium or discount resulting from the presence of multiple uses or other characteristics in one farm is also to be reflected. All factors generally considered in real estate valuation are to be considered in determining comparability under section 2032A. While not intended as an exclusive list, the following factors are among those to be considered in determining comparability—

(1) Similarity of soil as determined by any objective means, including an official soil survey reflected in a soil productivity index;

(2) Whether the crops grown are such as would deplete the soil in a similar manner;

(3) The types of soil conservation techniques that have been practiced on the two properties;

(4) Whether the two properties are subject to flooding;

(5) The slope of the land;

(6) In the case of livestock operations, the carrying capacity of the land;

(7) Where the land is timbered, whether the timber is comparable to that on the subject property;

(8) Whether the property as a whole is unified or whether it is segmented, and where segmented, the availability of the means necessary for movement among the different segments;

(9) The number, types, and conditions of all buildings and other fixed improvements located on the properties and their location as it affects efficient management and use of property and value per se; and

(10) Availability of, and type of, transportation facilities in terms of costs and of proximity of the properties to local markets.

(e) Effective interest rate defined—(1) Generally. The annual effective interest rate on new Federal land bank loans is the average billing rate charged on new agricultural loans to farmers and ranchers in the farm credit district in which the real property to be valued under section 2032A is located, adjusted as provided in paragraph (e)(2) of this section. This rate is to be a single rate for each district covering the period of one calendar year and is to be computed to the nearest one-hundredth of one percent. In the event that the district billing rates of interest on such new agricultural loans change during a year, the rate for that year is to be weighted to reflect the portion of the year during which each such rate was charged. If a district's billing rate on such new agricultural loans varies according to the amount of the loan, the rate applicable to a loan in an amount resulting from dividing the total dollar amount of such loans closed during the year by the total number of the loans closed is to be used under section 2032A. Applicable rates may be obtained from the district director of internal revenue.

(2) Adjustment to billing rate of interest. The billing rate of interest determined under this paragraph is to be adjusted to reflect the increased cost of borrowing resulting from the required purchase of land bank association stock. For section 2032A purposes, the rate of required stock investment is the average of the percentages of the face amount of new agricultural loans to farmers and ranchers required to be invested in such stock by the applicable district bank during the year. If this percentage changes during a year, the average is to be adjusted to reflect the period when each percentage requirement was effective. The percentage is viewed as a reduction in the loan proceeds actually received from the amount upon which interest is charged.

(3) Example. The determination of the effective interest rate for any year may be illustrated as follows:

Example. District X of the Federal land bank system charged an 8 percent billed interest rate on new agricultural loans for 8 months of the year, 1976, and an 8.75 percent rate for 4 months of the year. The average billing rate was, therefore, 8.25 percent [(1.08 × 8/12) + (1.0875 × 4/12) = 1.0825]. The district required stock equal to 5 percent of the face amount of the loan to be purchased as a precondition to receiving a loan. Thus, the borrower only received 95 percent of the funds upon which he paid interest. The applicable annual interest rate for 1976 of 8.68 percent is computed as follows: 8.25 percent × 1.00 (total loan amount) = 8.25 percent (billed interest rate) divided by 0.95 (percent of loan proceeds received by borrower) = 8.68 percent (effective interest rate for 1976).

§ 20.2032A-8 Election and agreement to have certain property valued under section 2032A for estate tax purposes.

(a) Election of special use valuation—(1) In general. An election under section 2032A is made as prescribed in paragraph (a)(3) of this section and on Form 706, United States Estate Tax Return. Once made, this election is irrevocable; however, see paragraph (d) of this section for a special rule for estates for which elections are made on or before August 30, 1980. Under section 2032A(a)(2), special use valuation may not reduce the value of the decedent's estate by more than $500,000. This election is available only if, at the time of death, the decedent was a citizen or resident of the United States.

(2) Elections to specially value less than all qualified real property included in an estate. An election under section 2032A need not include all real property included in an estate which is eligible for special use valuation, but sufficient property to satisfy the threshold requirements of section 2032A(b)(1)(B) must be specially valued under the election. If joint or undivided interests (e.g. interests as joint tenants or tenants in common) in the same property are received from a decedent by qualified heirs, an election with respect to one heir's joint or undivided interest need not include any other heir's interest in the same property if the electing heir's interest plus other property to be specially valued satisfy the requirements of section 2032A(b)(1)(B). If successive interests (e.g. life estates and remainder interests) are created by a decedent in otherwise qualified property, an election under section 2032A is available only with respect to that property (or portion thereof) in which qualified heirs of the decedent receive all of the successive interests, and such an election must include the interests of all of those heirs. For example, if a surviving spouse receives a life estate in otherwise qualified property and the spouse's brother receives a remainder interest in fee, no part of the property may be valued pursuant to an election under section 2032A. Where successive interests in specially valued property are created, remainder interests are treated as being received by qualified heirs only if (i) a qualified heir receives a present interest in that real property, (ii) all preceding interests in the property are vested absolutely in qualified heirs, and (iii) such remainder interests are not contingent upon surviving an alternate taker who is not a member of the decedent's family or are not vested subjected to divestment in favor of a nonfamily member. For the definition of present interest, see section 2503 and the regulations thereunder.

(3) Time and manner of making election. An election under this section is made by attaching to a timely filed estate tax return the agreement described in paragraph (c)(1) of this section and a notice of election which contains the following information:

(i) The decedent's name and taxpayer identification number as they appear on the estate tax return;

(ii) The relevant qualified use;

(iii) The items of real property shown on the estate tax return to be specially valued pursuant to the election (identified by schedule and item number);

(iv) The fair market value of the real property to be specially valued under section 2032A and its value based on its qualified use (both values determined without regard to the adjustments provided by section 2032A (b)(3)(B));

(v) The adjusted value (as defined in section 2032A(b)(3)(B) of all real property which is used in a qualified use and which passes from the decedent to a qualified heir and the adjusted value of all real property to be specially valued;

(vi) The items of personal property shown on the estate tax return that pass from the decedent to a qualified heir and are used in a qualified use under section 2032A (identified by schedule and item number) and the total value of such personal property adjusted as provided under section 2032A(b)(3)(B);

(vii) The adjusted value of the gross estate, as defined in section 2032A(b)(3)(A);

(viii) The method used in determining the special value based on use;

(x) A statement that the decedent and/or a member of his or her family has owned all specially valued real property for at least 5 years of the 8 years immediately preceding the date of the decedent's death;

(xi) Any periods during the 8-year period preceding the date of the decedent's death during which the decedent or a member of his or her family did not own the property, use it in a qualified use, or materially participate in the operation of the farm or other business within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(6);

(xii) Affidavits describing the activities constituting material participation to the decedent of each person taking an interest in each item of specially valued property, and the value of the property interests passing to each such person based on both fair market value and qualified use;

(xiii) Affidavits describing the activities constituting material participation and the identity of the material participant or participants; and

(xiv) A legal description of the specially valued property.

If neither an election nor a protective election is timely made, special use valuation is not available to the estate. See section 2032A(d)(1), 6075(a), and 6081(a).

(b) Protective election. A protective election may be made to specially value qualified real property. The availability of special use valuation pursuant to this election is contingent upon values as finally determined (or agreed to following examination of a return) meeting the requirements of section 2032A. A protective election does not, however, extend the time for payment of any amount of tax. Rules for such extensions are contained in sections 6161, 6163, 6166, and 6166A. The protective election is to be made by a notice of election filed with a timely estate tax return stating that a protective election under section 2032A is being made pending final determination of values. This notice is to include the following information:

(1) The decedent's name and taxpayer identification number as they appear on the estate tax return;

(2) The relevant qualified use; and

(3) The items of real and personal property shown on the estate tax return which are used in a qualified use, and which pass to qualified heirs (identified by schedule and item number).

If it is found that the estate qualifies for special use valuation based upon values as finally determined (or agreed to following examination of a return), an additional notice of election must be filed within 60 days after the date of such determination. This notice must set forth the information required under paragraph (a)(3) of this section and is to be attached, together with the agreement described in paragraph (c)(1) of this section, to an amended estate tax return. The new return is to be filed with the Internal Revenue Service office where the original return was filed.

(c) Agreement to special valuation by persons with an interest in property—(1) In general. The agreement required under section 2032A(a)(1)(B) and (d)(2) must be executed by all parties who have any interest in the property being valued based on qualified use as of the date of the decedent's death. In the case of a qualified heir, the agreement must express consent to personal liability under section 2032A(c) in the event of certain early dispositions of the property or early cessation of the qualified use. See section 2032A(c)(6). In the case of parties (other than qualified heirs) with interests in the property, the agreement must express consent to collection of any additional estate tax imposed under section 2032A(c) from the qualified property. The agreement is to be in a form that is binding on all parties having an interest in the property. It must designate an agent with satisfactory evidence of authority to act for the parties to the agreement in all dealings with the Internal Revenue Service on matters arising under section 2032A and must indicate the address of that agent.

(2) Persons having an interest in designated property. An interest in property is an interest which, as of the date of the decedent's death, can be asserted under applicable local law so as to affect the disposition of the specially valued property by the estate. Any person in being at the death of the decedent who has any such interest in the property, whether present or future, or vested or contingent, must enter into the agreement. Included among such persons are owners of remainder and executory interests, the holders of general or special powers of appointment, beneficiaries of a gift over in default of exercise of any such power, co-tenants, joint tenants and holders of other undivided interests when the decedent held only a joint or undivided interest in the property or when only an undivided interest is specially valued, and trustees of trusts holding any interest in the property. An heir who has the power under local law to caveat (challenge) a will and thereby affect disposition of the property is not, however, considered to be a person with an interest in property under section 2032A solely by reason of that right. Likewise, creditors of an estate are not such persons solely by reason of their status as creditors.

(3) Consent on behalf of interested party. If any person required to enter into the agreement provided for by paragraph (c)(1) either desires that an agent act for him or her or cannot legally bind himself or herself due to infancy or other incompetency, or to death before the election under section 2032A is timely exercised, a representative authorized under local law to bind such person in an agreement of this nature is permitted to sign the agreement on his or her behalf.

(4) Duties of agent designated in agreement. The Internal Revenue Service will contact the agent designated in the agreement under paragraph (c)(1) on all matters relating to continued qualification under section 2032A of the specially valued real property and on all matters relating to the special lien arising under section 6324B. It is the duty of the agent as attorney-in-fact for the parties with interests in the specially valued property to furnish the Service with any requested information and to notify the Service of any disposition or cessation of qualified use of any part of the property.

(d) Special rule for estates for which elections under section 2032A are made on or before August 30, 1980. An election to specially value real property under section 2032A that is made on or before August 30, 1980, may be revoked. To revoke an election, the executor must file a notice of revocation with the Internal Revenue Service office where the original estate tax return was filed on or before January 1, 1981 (or if earlier, the date on which the period of limitation for assessment expires). This notice of revocation must contain the decedent's name, date of death, and taxpayer identification number, and is to be accompanied by remittance of any additional amount of estate tax and interest determined to be due as a result of valuation of the qualified property based upon its fair market value. Elections that are made on or before August 30, 1980, that do not comply with this section as proposed on July 13, 1978 (43 FR 30070), and amended on December 21, 1978 (43 FR 59517), must be conformed to this final regulation by means of an amended return before the original estate tax return can be finally accepted by the Internal Revenue Service.

Par. 4. The third sentence of paragraph (c) of § 20.6081-1 is amended by striking out the first word and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in § 20.2032A-8(d) and § 20.6166-1(h), the".

Par. 5. Section 20.6166 is deleted.

Par. 6. Sections 20.6166-1, 20.6166-2, 20.6166-3, and 20.6166-4 are redesignated §§ 20.6166A-1, 20.6166A-2, 20.6166A-3, and 20.6166A-4 respectively.

Par 7. The following new section is added following § 20.6165-1:

§ 20.6166-1 Election of alternate extension of time for payment of estate tax where estate consists largely of interest in closely held business.

(a) In general. Section 6166 allows an executor to elect to extend payment of part or all of the portion of the estate tax which is attributable to a closely held business interest (as defined in section 6166(b)(1)). If it is made at the time the estate tax return is filed, the election is applicable both to the tax originally determined to be due and to certain deficiencies. If no election is made when the estate tax return is filed, up to the full amount of certain later deficiencies (but not any tax originally determined to be due) may be paid in installments.

(b) Time and manner of election. The election provided under section 6166(a) is made by attaching to a timely filed estate tax return a notice of election containing the following information:

(1) The decedent's name and taxpayer identification number as they appear on the estate tax return;

(2) The amount of tax which is to be paid in installments;

(3) The date selected for payment of the first installment;

(4) The number of annual installments, including the first installment, in which the tax is to be paid;

(5) The properties shown on the estate tax return which constitute the closely held business interest (identified by schedule and item number); and

(6) The facts which formed the basis for the executor's conclusion that the estate qualifies for payment of the estate tax in installments.

In the absence of a statement in the notice of election as to the amount of tax to be paid in installments, the date selected for payment of the first installment, or the number of installments, the election is presumed to be for the maximum amount so payable and for payment thereof in 10 equal installments, the first of which is due on the date which is 5 years after the date prescribed in section 6151(a) for payment of estate tax.

(c) Treatment of certain deficiencies—(1) No election before assessment of deficiency. Where a deficiency is assessed and no election, including a protective election, has been made under section 6166(a) to pay any tax in installments, the executor may elect under section 6166(h) to pay the portion of the deficiency attributable to the closely held business interest in installments. However, this is true only if the estate qualifies under section 6166 based upon values as finally determined (or agreed to following examination of a return). Such an election is exercised by filing a notice of election with the Internal Revenue Service office where the estate tax return was filed. The notice of election must be filed within 60 days after issuance of notice and demand for payment of the deficiency, and it must contain the same information as is required under paragraph (b) of this section. The notice of election is to be accompanied by payment of the amount of tax and interest, the date for payment of which has arrived as determined under paragraphs (e) and (f) of this section, plus any amount of unpaid tax and interest which is not attributable to the closely held business interest and which is not eligible for further extension (or currently extended) under another section (other than section 6166A).

(2) Election made with estate tax return. If the executor makes an election under section 6166(a) (other than a protective election) at the time the estate tax return is filed and a deficiency is later assessed, the portion of the deficiency which is attributable to the closely held business interest (but not any accrued interest thereon) will be prorated to the installments payable pursuant to the original section 6166(a) election. Any part of the deficiency prorated to an installment, the date for payment of which has arrived, is due upon notice and demand. Interest for any such period, including the deferral period, is payable upon notice and demand.

(3) Portion of deficiency attributable to closely held business interest. Only that portion of any deficiency which is attributable to a closely held business interest may be paid in installments under section 6166. The amount of any deficiency which is so attributable is the difference between the amount of tax which the executor has previously elected to pay in installments under section 6166 and the maximum amount of tax which the executor could have elected to pay in installments on the basis of a return which reflects the adjustments that resulted in the deficiency.

(d) Protective election. A protective election may be made to defer payment of any portion of tax remaining unpaid at the time values are finally determined (or agreed to following examination of a return) and any deficiencies attributable to the closely held business interest (within the meaning of paragraph (c)(3) of this section). Extension of tax payments pursuant to this election is contingent upon final values meeting the requirements of section 6166. A protective election does not, however, extend the time for payment of any amount of tax. Rules for such extensions are contained in sections 6161, 6163, and 6166A. A protective election is made by filing a notice of election with a timely filed estate tax return stating that the election is being made. Within 60 days after values are finally determined (or agreed to following examination of a return), a final notice of election which sets forth the information required under paragraph (b) of this section must be filed with the Internal Revenue Service office where the original estate tax return was filed. That notice of final election is to be accompanied by payment of any amount of previously unpaid tax and interest, the date for payment of which has arrived as determined under paragraphs (e) and (f) of this section, plus any amount of unpaid tax and interest which is not attributable to the closely held business interest and which is not eligible for further extension (or currently extended) under another section (other than section 6166A).

(e) Special rules—(1) Effect of deficiencies and protective elections upon payment. Upon election to extend the time for payment of a deficiency or upon final determination of values following a protective election, the executor must prorate the tax or deficiency attributable to the closely held business interest among all installments. All amounts attributed to installments which would have been due had the election been made at the time the tax was due to be paid under section 6151(a) and all accrued interest must be paid at the time the election is made.

(2) Determination of date for payment of first installment. The executor may defer payment of tax (but not interest) for any period up to 5 years from the date determined under section 6151(a) for payment of the estate tax. The date chosen for payment of the first installment of tax is not required to be on an annual anniversary of the original due date of the tax; however, it must be the date within any month which corresponds to the day of the month determined under section 6151(a).

(f) Rule for computing interest. Section 6601(j) provides a special 4 percent interest rate for the amount of tax (including deficiencies) which is to be paid in installments under section 6166. This special interest rate applies only to that amount of tax which is to be paid in installments and which does not exceed the limitation of section 6601(j)(2). Where payment of a greater amount of tax than is subject to section 6601(j)(2) is extended under section 6166, each installment is deemed to be comprised of both tax subject to the 4 percent interest rate and tax subject to the rate otherwise prescribed by section 6621. The percentage of any installment subject to the special 4 percent rate is equal to the percentage of the total tax payable in installments which is subject to the 4 percent rate. Where an election is made under the provisions of paragraphs (b) or (c)(1) of this section, the 4 percent rate applies from the date on which the estate tax was originally due to be paid. If only a protective election is made, section 6601(j) applies to the amount which is to be paid in installments, limited to the amount of any deficiency, from the due date for payment of estate tax. After the date upon which the section 6166 election is made final, section 6601(j) applies to the entire amount to be paid in installments.

(g) Relation of sections 6166 and 6166A. No election may be made under section 6166 if an election under section 6166A applies with respect to an estate. For example, no election can be made under section 6166(h) where an executor has made an election under section 6166A. If an election is timely made under either section 6166 or section 6166A, however, a protective election can be made under the other section at the same time. If the executor then files a timely notice of final election under the section protectively elected and pays any amounts determined to be due currently following final determination of (or agreement as to) estate tax values, the original election under the other provision will be deemed never to have applied to the estate.

(h) Special rule for estates for which elections under section 6166 are made on or before August 30, 1980. An election to extend payment of estate tax under section 6166 that is made on or before August 30, 1980 may be revoked. To revoke an election, the executor must file a notice of revocation with the Internal Revenue Service office where the original estate tax return was filed on or before January 1, 1981 (or if earlier, the date on which the period of limitation on assessment expires). This notice of revocation must contain the decedent's name, date of death, and taxpayer identification number, and is to be accompanied by remittance of any additional amount of estate tax and interest determined to be due.

(i) Examples. The provisions of this section may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1)—(i). Based upon values shown on decedent A's timely filed estate tax return, 60 percent of the value of A's adjusted gross estate consisted of a farm which was a closely held business within the meaning of section 6166. A's executor, B, made a protective election under section 6166 when he filed A's estate tax return. B also applied for an extension of time under section 6161 to pay $15,000 of the $30,000 of estate tax shown due on the return. The requested extension was granted and was renewed at the end of 1 year. Eighteen months after the return was filed and after examination of A's estate tax return, the value of the farm was found to constitute 67 percent of the adjusted gross estate. B entered into an agreement consenting to the values as established on examination and to a deficiency of $5,000. B then filed a final notice of election under section 6166, choosing a 5-year deferral followed by 10 annual installment payments and thereby terminated his extension under section 6161 because that amount of tax was then included under the section 6166 election. B could have extended payment of 67 percent of the total estate tax, or $23,450. $23,450 is eligible for installment payments under section 6166 and the section 6166 election is considered to be for that amount. B is considered to have prepaid $3,450 of tax since only $20,000 of tax remained unpaid. The $3,450 is attributed to the first installment of $2,345 and to $1,105 of the second installment which would have been payable under the section 6166 election.

(ii) Had B been granted an extension of time under section 6161 to pay $20,000 of tax, $25,000 would remain unpaid when the final section 6166 election is made. Payment of the full $23,450 (67 percent) of tax which is attributable to the closely held business interest is included under the section 6166 election. The balance of unpaid tax ($1,550) is due upon expiration of the estate's section 6161 extension.

(iii) Assume the facts under example (1)(i). B must pay all unpaid accrued interest with his notice of final election. Since only 18 months have passed, no installments of tax are due. Interest on the $5,000 deficiency is computed at 4 percent per annum for the entire 18 months, and interest for 12 months of that period is currently due to be paid. Interest for the remaining 6 months is due at the next succeeding date for payment of interest. Interest on the $15,000 of tax extended under section 6161 is computed at the rate determined under section 6621 until the date of the final section 6166 election and is due upon termination of the section 6161 extension. After that date, the interest on the $15,000 will also accrue at 4 percent per annum.

Example (2). Assume the facts as in example (1), except B initially made an election under section 6166A and made no protective election under section 6166. Following final determination of values, B is not permitted to make any election under section 6166; however, had B protectively elected section 6166 at the time he made the section 6166A election, he could have terminated the section 6166A election and finally elected under section 6166. In such a case, the full $23,450 of tax attributable to the farm would have been eligible for extension under section 6166. The 4 percent interest rate would apply to the $5,000 deficiency from the original due date of the tax, and, as with the extension under section 6161, it would apply to the amounts extended under section 6166A only from the date on which the election under section 6166 was finalized.

Example (3). C died in 1977. His estate owes Federal estate taxes of $750,000, $500,000 of which is attributable to a closely held business interest. Payment of the $500,000 was extended under section 6166. A 5-year deferral followed by 10 annual installment payments was chosen by C's executor. Under paragraph (f) of this section, only 63.16 percent of each installment will be subject to the special 4 percent interest rate and the remainder will be subject to the rate determined under section 6621. The same rule applies in computing interest for the 5 years during which payment of tax is deferred. (This is so because the 4 percent interest rate applies only to a maximum of $345,800 of tax less the $30,000 of credit allowable under section 2010(a) rather than to the entire $500,000 extended amount.)

§ 20.6324A-1. Election of and agreement to special lien for estate tax deferred under section 6166 or 6166A.

For regulations concerning the election of and agreement to the special lien for estate tax deferred under section 6166 or 6166A, see § 301.6324A-1 of this Chapter (Regulations on Procedure and Administration).

Par. 9. The following new section is added following § 301.6324-1:

§ 301.6324-1. Election of and agreement to special lien for estate tax deferred under section 6166 or 6166A.

(a) Election of lien. If payment of a portion of the estate tax is deferred under section 6166 or 6166A, an executor of a decedent's estate who seeks to be discharged from personal liability may elect a lien in favor of the United States in lieu of the bonds required by sections 2204 and 2165. This election is made by applying to the Internal Revenue Service office where the estate tax return is filed at any time prior to payment of the full amount of estate tax and interest due. The application is to be a notice of election requesting the special lien provided by section 6324A and is to be accompanied by the agreement described in paragraph (b)(1) of this section.

(b) Agreement to lien—(1) In general. A lien under this section will not arise unless all parties having any interest in all property designated in the notice of election as property to which the lien is to attach sign an agreement in which they consent to the creation of the lien. (Property so designated need not be property included in the decedent's estate.) The agreement is to be attached to the notice in which the lien under section 6324A is elected. It must be in a form that is binding on all parties having any interest on the property and must contain the following:

(i) The decedent's name and taxpayer identification number as they appear on the estate tax return;

(ii) The amount of the lien;

(iii) The fair market value of the property to be subject to the lien as of the date of the decedent's death and the date of the election under this section;

(iv) The amount, as of the date of the decedent's death and the date of the election, of all encumbrances on the property, including mortgages and any lien under section 6324B;

(v) A clear description of the property which is to be subject to the lien, and in the case of property other than land, a statement of its estimated remaining useful life; and

(vi) Designation of an agent (including the agent's address) for the beneficiaries of the estate and the consenting parties to the lien for all dealings with the Internal Revenue Service on matters arising under section 6166 or 6166A, or under section 6324A.

(2) Persons having an interest in designated property. An interest in property is any interest which as of the date of the election can be asserted under applicable local law so as to affect the disposition of any property designated in the agreement required under this section. Any person in being at the date of the election who has any such interest in the property, whether present or future, or vested or contingent, must enter into the agreement. Included among such persons are owners of remainder and executory interests, the holders of general or special powers of appointment, beneficiaries of a gift over in default of exercise of any such power, co-tenants, joint tenants, and holders of other undivided interests when the decedent held a joint or undivided interest in the property, and trustees of trusts holding any interest in the property. An heir who has the power under local law to caveat (challenge) a will and thereby affect disposition of the property is not, however, considered to be a person with an interest in property under section 6324A solely by reason of that right. Likewise, creditors of an estate are not such persons solely by reason of their status as creditors.

(3) Consent on behalf of interested party. If any person required to enter into the agreement provided for by this paragraph either desires that an agent act for him or her or cannot legally bind himself or herself due to infancy or other incompetency, a representative authorized under local law to bind the interested party in an agreement of this nature is permitted to sign the agreement on his or her behalf.

(4) Duties of agent designated in agreement. The Internal Revenue Service will contact the agent designated in the agreement under paragraph (b)(1) on all matters relating to continued qualification of the estate under section 6166 or 6166A and on all matters relating to the special lien arising under section 6324A. It is the duty of the agent as attorney-in-fact for the parties with interests in the property subject to the lien under section 6324A to furnish the Service with any requested information and to notify the Service of any event giving rise to acceleration of the deferred amount of tax.

(c) Partial substitution of bond for lien. If the amount of unpaid estate tax plus interest exceeds the value (determined for purposes of section 6324A(b)(2)) of property listed in the agreement under paragraph (b) of this section, the Internal Revenue Service may condition the release from personal liability upon the executor's submitting an agreement listing additional property or furnishing an acceptable bond in the amount of such excess.

(d) Relation of sections 6324A and 2204. The lien under section 6324A is deemed to be a bond under section 2204 for purposes of determining an executor's release from personal liability. If an election has been made under section 6324A, the executor may not substitute a bond pursuant to section 2204 in lieu of that lien. If a bond has been supplied under section 2204, however, the executor may, by filing a proper notice of election and agreement, substitute a lien under section 6324A for any part or all of such bond.

(e) Relation of sections 6324A and 6324. If there is a lien under this section on any property with respect to an estate, that lien is in lieu of the lien provided by section 6324 on such property with respect to the same estate.

(f) Section 6324A lien to be in lieu of bond under section 6165. The lien under section 6324A is in lieu of any bond otherwise required under section 6165 with respect to tax to be paid in installments under section 6166 or section 6166A.

(g) Special rule for estates for which elections under section 6324A are made on or before August 30, 1980. If a lien is elected under section 6324A on or before August 30, 1980, the original election may be revoked. To revoke an election, the executor must file a notice of revocation containing the decedent's name, date of death, and taxpayer identification number with the Internal Revenue Service office where the original estate tax return for the decedent was filed. The notice must be filed on or before January 31, 1981 (or if earlier, the date on which the period of limitation for assessment expires).

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 2032A and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (90 Stat. 1856, 68A Stat. 917, 26 U.S.C. 2032A, 7805).

Section 2033.—Property in Which the Decedent Had an Interest

26 CFR 20.2033-1: Property in which the decedent had an interest.

Section 2042.—Proceeds of Life Insurance

26 CFR 20.2042-1: Proceeds of life insurance.
(Also Section 2033; 20.2033-1.)

Life insurance proceeds; community property; Texas. An individual who was a resident of Texas obtained an insurance policy on the individual's life prior to marriage, paid a portion of the premiums from separate funds and a portion from community funds, and designated the spouse as beneficiary. The amount includible in the individual's gross estate with respect to the insurance policy is reduced by one-half the amount of premiums paid with community funds.

Rev. Rul. 80-242

ISSUE

What amount is includible in D's gross estate with respect to insurance on D's life, under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

D, a resident of Texas, obtained, when unmarried, a whole life policy of insurance on D's life, in the face amount of $100,000. D paid $3,000 in premiums before marriage. After marriage, $12,000 in premiums were paid with funds that were, under the law of Texas, community property. D held the incidents of ownership in the policy until death. The surviving spouse, S, was the designated beneficiary of the policy.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2033 of the Internal Revenue Code provides that a decedent's gross estate shall include the value of all property to the extent of the decedent's interest therein at the time of death.

Section 2042(2) includes in the gross estate the proceeds of insurance on the decedent's life if the decedent possessed incidents of ownership in the policy.

Under Texas law the proceeds of an insurance policy belong to the insured's separate estate, if the policy was initially the separate property of the insured when acquired. However, if after the policy is acquired premiums are paid with community funds, then the proceeds are subject to the community estate's right of reimbursement for the return of community funds used to pay the premiums. Parson v. U.S., 46 F. 2d 228 (5th Cir. 1972); Wildenthal v. Commissioner, T.C.M. 1970-119; Gray v. Bush, 430 S.W. 2d 258 (Tex. Civ. App., 1968); McCurdy v. McCurdy, 372 S.W. 2d 381 (Tex. Civ. App. 1963).

In the present case, the policy was the separate property of D when acquired and therefore the proceeds belong to D's separate estate. However, since $12,000 in insurance premiums was paid with community funds, the insurance proceeds are subject to the community claim for reimbursement of premiums paid. Therefore, the amount includible in D's gross estate under section 2042(2) of the Code is the face amount of policy proceeds less the amount of premiums paid with community funds, or $88,000. In addition, one-half of the reimbursed premiums ($6,000) is separately includible in D's gross estate under section 2033 of the Code as the value of D's interest, at death, in community property. See Wildenthal v. Commissioner, cited above.

The above conclusions regarding the amount includible with respect to the decedent's insurance policy proceeds are in direct conflict with Rev. Rul. 54-272, 1954-2 C.B. 298, which applies a discussion of Louisiana law contained in Paragraph (E) of Rev. Rul. 232, 1953-2 C.B. 268, to similar situations arising under Texas law. Applying Rev. Rul. 54-272, to the facts in the present situation, $100,000 would be includible under section 2042 of the Code. The Service will no longer follow the position stated in Rev. Rul. 54-272 that in cases when the surviving spouse is the beneficiary the full value of the insurance proceeds, purchased in part with community funds, is includible in the gross estate under section 2042. However, in such cases the Service will continue to disallow a deduction under section 2053 for the community's claim for reimbursement, since under Texas law the community's claim for reimbursement of the insurance premiums paid from community funds is a claim on the insurance proceeds rather than a claim on the decedent's estate. See sections 20.2053-4 and 20.2053-7 of the Estate Tax Regulations. For the same reason, when the decedent's estate, or someone other than the surviving spouse is the beneficiary, the Service will not allow a deduction under section 2053 with regard to the community's reimbursement claim. However, the community's reimbursement claim will be reflected as a reduction in the amount includible in the gross estate under section 2042.

HOLDING

The amounts includible in D's gross estate are $88,000 as insurance proceeds under section 2042 of the Code and $6,000 as community property under section 2033.

EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

Rev. Rul. 54-272 is modified with respect to its conclusions that the full value of insurance proceeds purchased in part with community funds is includible in the gross estate, and that a claim by the community for reimbursement for premiums paid with community funds may be allowed as a deduction from the insured's gross estate in cases when either the insured's estate or someone other than the surviving spouse is the named beneficiary.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER B,—PART 26a.—TEMPORARY GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER TAX REGULATIONS UNDER THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1976

Return requirements

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides a temporary regulation relating to the filing of returns for the tax on generation-skipping transfers. That tax was introduced by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. The temporary regulation identifies the person required to make the return of tax and prescribes the time and manner of filing, and the form used to make the return. It affects trustees and beneficiaries of generation-skipping trusts. In addition, the rules contained in the temporary regulation in this document also serve as a notice of proposed rulemaking by which the rules are proposed to be prescribed as final regualtions.

DATE: The regulation applies generally to any generation-skipping transfer made after June 11, 1976.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION

BACKGROUND

This document provides a temporary generation-skipping transfer tax regulation under Chapter 13 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (Code), as added by section 2006(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (Public Law 94-455; 90 Stat. 1879) [1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 355] to provide rules for making the necessary return of tax. The temporary regulation provided by this document will remain in effect until superseded by final regulations on this subject. By a separate document appearing elsewhere in this issue of the Federal Register, the regulation promulgated in this document is also proposed to be prescribed as final Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 26) under section 2621 of the Code.

PROVISIONS OF THE REGULATION

The generation-skipping transfer tax return consists of a statement filed with the Internal Revenue Service within the time specified in the regulation. The due date depends upon the type of event which gives rise to liability for the tax.

With a taxable distribution, generally it is the distributee of the money or property who must make the return. To enable the distributee to file the return, the distributee must first obtain information from the trustee and in many cases from the Service. Therefore, the regulation requires the trustee to file an information return with the Service and to send a statement to the distributee identifying the portion of a distribution that is taxable. If the distributee needs any additional information to compute the tax imposed on the taxable distribution, the distributee may obtain this information by filing a written request with the Service. After the Service has supplied the requested information, the distributee is then able to compute the tax and file the return. In the case of a taxable termination, the trustee must make the return and if the trustee is in need of additional information the trustee may also file a written request with the Service. Furthermore, the regulation provides guidelines for situations when there is no trustee (as in the case of a trust equivalent) or when the distributee is unable to act for him or herself.

Under the temporary regulations, generally section 643(b) income is computed on an annual basis in determining whether distributions from the trust are taxable distributions. If during the taxable year of the trust there are distributions and a termination, then section 643(b) income is computed for two short periods. This rule will curtail the possible abuse that could arise when the trustee anticipates that a taxable termination will occur during the taxable year of the trust and therefore distributes money or property to a younger generation beneficiary equal in value to what the anticipated section 643(b) income will be for the year. But for this rule, a trustee could distribute unearned but anticipated income prior to a taxable termination and it would not be taxable because of the current income exclusion, nor would it be on hand to be included in the trust on the date of the taxable termination.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation is Robert H. Waltuch of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Waiver of Procedural Requirements of Treasury Directive

There is need for expeditous adoption of the provisions contained in this document because of the need for immediate guidance to persons required to file a return of tax. For this reason, Jerome Kurtz, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has determined that the provisions of paragraphs 8 through 14 of the Treasury Department directive implementing Executive Order 12044 must be waived.

Adoption of regulations

A new part 26a, Temporary Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax Regulations under the Tax Reform Act of 1976, is hereby added to Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations, and the following temporary regulation is hereby adopted:

Sec.
26a.2621-1 Generation-skipping transfer tax return requirements.

Authority. Sections 2622 and 7805, Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (90 Stat. 1887, 68A Stat. 917, 26 USC 2621, 7805).

§ 26a.2621-1 Generation - skipping transfer tax return requirements.

(a) In general. Chapter 13 of the Code imposes a tax on generation-skipping transfers, as defined in section 2611. The tax applies to both taxable distributions and terminations of either interests in property or powers over property. For purposes of this part, the term "distributee" means a younger generation beneficiary who actually receives money or property (or has money or property applied for his benefit) from a generation-skipping trust or trust equivalent. This section contains rules for making the required tax return.

(b) Person required to make return—(1) In general. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the following person must make the required tax return, Form 706-B, Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax Return,—

(i) The distributee in a taxable distribution, as defined in section 2613 (a),

(ii) The trustee in the case of a taxable termination, as defined in section 2613(b), or

(iii) The distributee in the case of a generation-skipping transfer involving a generation-skipping trust equivalent.

(2) Entity. If a trust, estate, corporation or partnership is the recipient of money or property in a taxable distribution, then those persons who are assigned to a generation under section 2611(c)(7) shall be treated as distributees to the extent of their interest in the entity and are responsible for filing the return and paying the tax.

(3) Exceptions—(i) Minors. If a distributee is otherwise required to make a return, but the distributee is a minor, a return must be made by the minor or must be made for the minor by the minor's guardian or other person charged with the care of the minor's person or property.

(ii) Returns made by agents. The return of tax may be made by an agent if, by reason of disease, injury, illness or absence from the country, the person liable for making the return is unable to make it. Mere convenience is not sufficient reason for authorizing an agent to make the return. If the return is made by an agent, the return must be ratified by the principal within a reasonable time after such person becomes able to do so. If not ratified, it will not be the return required by the statute. The ratification must be in the form of a statement executed under penalties of perjury by the principal and filed with the Internal Revenue Service office with which the return was filed. It must state specifically that the return made by the agent has been carefully examined and that the principal ratifies the return. If a return is signed by an agent, a statement fully explaining the inability of the principal must accompany the return.

(iii) Returns filed by fiduciary or executor on behalf of distributee. A fiduciary acting as the guardian or committee of an insane person must make the required return. If a distributee who would be required to make the return for a transfer dies after the transfer occurs but before the return is filed, the executor or other person in possession of the decedent's assets is required to make the return.

(4) Special rules—(i) Joint and undivided interests with distributees making return. If paragraph (b)(1) of this section requires the distributee to make the tax return and if more than one distributee of a deemed transferor receives an interest in or power over property jointly, or simultaneously receives other undivided interests in property, all of the distributees must jointly make the return. Should any distributee fail to join in making the return, the remaining distributees must make a return for the entire transfer. This return must identify the distributee not joining in it and the property interests passing to that distributee. The tax is to be computed on the entire transfer and is to be paid in full by the distributees making the return, unless their liability under paragraph (h)(1) of this section is less than that amount, in which case an amount equal to their full liability must be remitted. This payment does not, however, relieve the non-filing distributee of any liability under state law to the person who filed the return for tax attributable to property received by the non-filing distributee.

(ii) Multiple trustees. In the case of a taxable termination, if there is more than one trustee of a generation-skipping trust, the return may be made by any one of them. The return must identify the trustees not joining in it. Payment of the entire amount of tax is due with the return.

(c) Time and manner of filing return—(1) In general. Form 706-B must be filed with the Internal Revenue Service office with which an estate or gift tax return of the deemed transferor must be filed. It must be filed—

(i) Except as provided in paragraph (c)(1)(ii) of this section, in the case of a taxable distribution or termination that occurs before the death of the deemed transferor, on or before the expiration of 6 months after the close of the taxable year of the trust (or in the case of a trust equivalent, the close of the deemed transferor's taxable year in which the transfer occurred).

(ii) In the case of a taxable distribution or termination that occurs within the same taxable year as the death of the deemed transferor, or any time after the death of the deemed transferor, on or before the later of the expiration of 6 month after the last day allowed for filing the estate tax return (including extensions), or 6 months after the close of the taxable year of the trust (or in the case of a trust equivalent, the close of the distributee's taxable year in which the transfer occurred).

When, under section 2613(b), any transfer is deemed to occur later than it actually does, the time for filing the return is to be measured from the date on which the transfer is deemed to occur (see also paragraph (k) of this section for initial filing date).

(2) Transfers within 3 years of death of deemed transferor. If a deemed transferor dies within 3 years after a generation-skipping transfer has occurred, an amended return must be filed for the transfer. The due date for the return is determined as if the prior transfer occurred at the same time as the deemed transferor's death and the tax must be recomputed as if the transfer had occurred immediately after the deemed transferor's death. Only one amended return need be filed by each distributee who filed previously. It must include all transfers that occurred within 3 years prior to the deemed transferor's death and any increase in tax must be paid by that distributee. If the rules under § 26a.2621-1(g)(2) (relating to a distribution and a termination occurring during the same taxable year) apply, then those persons required to file a return under § 26a.2621-1(b) because of a distribution in a short period (described in paragraph (g)(2) of this section) and an amended return for transfers within 3 years of death are required to file only one return which includes all the transfers that occurred during the 3-year period.

(d) Form of return. Form 706-B must be filed in accordance with its instructions.

(e) Requirement of return where no tax is due. A return of tax for every generation-skipping transfer, as defined in section 2611(a), and every transfer that would be a generation-skipping transfer but for the application of section 2613(a)(4)(A) or (b)(5)(A), must be made as provided in this section. This is so even if no tax liability arises from a given transfer.

(2) Time for filing. If the due date of the 706-B is determined under § 26a.2621-1(c)(1)(i), then Form 706-B(1) must be filed on or before the fifteenth day of the third month following the close of the taxable year of the trust. If the due date of Form 706-B is determined under §26a.2621-1(c)(1)(ii), then Form 706-B(1) must be filed on or before the later of the fifteenth day of the third month following the close of the taxable year of the trust, or the fifteenth day of the third month following the last day allowed for filing the estate tax return.

(g) Taxable distributions—(1) Annual return. The return required by this section must include all taxable distributions received by the distributee from a trust that occurred during the taxable year of the trust. For the sole purpose of determining the rate at which a taxable distribution is taxed, all taxable distributions that relate to the same deemed transferor and that are from the same or different trusts which have the same taxable year are treated as occurring simultaneously during the taxable year (or short period) and the rules under section 2602 apply in computing the tax on each.

(2) Exception. If, in addition to taxable distributions occurring during the taxable year of the trust, there is also a taxable termination which is not the result of the death of the deemed transferor, then for the purpose of determining whether distributions exceed the amount of section 643(b) income, section 643(b) income is computed separately for each of two periods. The first period begins on the first day of the taxable year of the trust and ends on the day immediately preceding the day on which the taxable termination occurs (or is deemed to occur). The second begins the day the taxable termination occurs (or is deemed to occur) and ends on the last day of the taxable year. If the termination is the result of the death of a deemed transferor, the first period ends immediately before the termination occurs (or is deemed to occur) and the second period begins immediately after the termination occurs(or is deemed to occur). The amount of section 643(b) income for each period is then determined as if each short period were a short taxable year. If after computing section 643(b) income for each period, distributions during a period exceed section 643(b) income for that period, then the return must be filed for the year if the distribution of the money or property meets the definition of a taxable distribution. If after computing section 643(b) income for the first short period the income exceeds the amount distributed, then the excess is treated as earned during the second short period.

(3) Examples. This paragraph may be illustrated by the following examples.

Example (1). Assume A creates a generation-skipping trust with the income and/or corpus payable to his child B and his grandchildren C and D (the children of B) for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and upon the death of the last survivor to the grandchildren of B per stirpes. Assume that the grandchild exclusion has been utilized and that all section 643(b) income has been distributed previously. During the year 1990 C received $40,000 from the trust and D received $110,000. B has made no gifts during his lifetime and there have been no other generation-skipping transfers. Since C and D both have the same deemed transferor, the transfers are treated as occurring simultaneously and the tax is computed in the following manner:

(1)	Fair market value of property transferred to C & D	$150,000
(2)	Prior generation-skipping transfers	0
(3)	Adjusted taxable gifts	0
(4)	Taxable estate	0
(5)	Total	$150,000
(6)	Tax on amount on line 5	$ 38,800
(7)	Tax due from C $\frac{(\ 40,000}{(150,000} \times 38,800)$	$ 10,347
(8)	Tax due from D $\frac{(110,000}{(150,000} \times 38,800)$	$ 28,453

Example (2). Assume A creates a generation-skipping trust with the income and/or corpus payable in the sole discretion of the trustee to his child B, grandchild C, and great grandchild D for their joint lives and for the lives of the survivors. Upon the death of the last survivor the trust corpus is to be distributed to A's great great grandchlidren per stirpes. The trust is a calendar year taxpayer. On January 1, 1990, the trustee distributes $20,000 to C. On June 1, 1990, B dies. Section 643(b) income for the full year is $30,000, one-half ($15,000) of which was earned between Jan. 1, 1990, and June 1, 1990. Thus, under paragraph (c) $5,000 ($20,000 minus $15,000) of the $20,000 distribution is a taxable distribution.

(h) Liability for tax—(1) Distributee. If the tax imposed is not paid when due, each distributee (whether or not required to file a return) that receives property from the trust at the same time as or any time after a generation-skipping transfer is personally liable for the tax under section 2603(a)(1)(B) as a distributee to the extent of an amount equal to the fair market value of the property received determined as of the date of the distribution.

(2) Trustees. In the case of a taxable termination, if a trustee is required to make the return, the trustee is personally liable for the tax imposed on the transfer if the tax is not paid when due. This liability applies whether or not a trustee joins in making the tax return in situations involving multiple trustees or makes the return when it is the sole trustee. If a trustee pays the tax determined to be due based on written data furnished by the Service, the trustee is not personally liable for any tax exceeding the amount determined to be due based on that data. This limit on a trustee's personal liability applies only if all the required information that was furnished to the Service by the trustee (or trustees) was accurate and complete. An increase in tax based on a higher property valuation than that claimed by the trustee is, for example, the result of inaccurate information and therefore the trustee will be liable for any increase in tax.

(3) Lien on property. The tax imposed by section 2601 is a lien on all property transferred in a generation-skipping transfer until the tax is fully paid or becomes unenforceable by reason of lapse of time. The lien attaches at the time of the generation-skipping transfer and is in addition to the lien for taxes under section 6321. Thus, for example, if property passes to more than one person in a simultaneous transfer as described in section 2602 (b), the property passing to each person is liable for the full amount of tax caused by the total transfer.

(i) This designation is not used.

(j) Request to Internal Revenue Service for information—(1) In general. A trustee or distributee may, before making a generation-skipping transfer tax return, request in writing that the Internal Revenue Service supply it with a statement showing—

(i) The amount of the deemed transferor's adjusted taxable gifts within the meaning of section 201(b) as modified by section 201(e),

(ii) The amount of the deemed transferor's taxable estate and the estate tax thereon before allowance of any credits,

(iii) The amount of prior generation-skipping transfers with respect to the deemed transferor,

(iv) The amount of prior generation-skipping transfers that occurred within three years prior to the deemed transferor's death and the amount of the generation-skipping transfer tax paid with respect to these transfers,

(v) The amount of generation-skipping transfer tax imposed before the allowance of any credits with respect to prior generation-skipping transfers,

(vi) The amount of State death tax credit allowed on the deemed transferor's estate tax return and the amount of State death tax credit allowed on prior generation-skipping transfer tax returns,

(vii) The amounts necessary to complete Schedule F, Credit for Tax on Prior Transfers,

(viii) The amount of the grandchild exclusion that has been used for transfers to a grandchild of the grantor,

(ix) The amount of any taxable distributions or taxable terminations that occurred during the same taxable year and that were made from other trusts having the same deemed transferor, and

(x) Any other data that may be needed to complete Form 706-B, Generation-Skipping Transfers Tax Return.

(2) Filing of request. The request for the information specified in paragraph (j)(1) of this section must be in writing and signed by any person required to file the return. It must be addressed to the Internal Revenue Service office with which an estate or gift tax return of the deemed transferor would be filed. It should be filed not less than 90 days before the due date of the generation-skipping tax return for the transfer involved. If the request is filed less than 90 days before the due date of the return, the failure to obtain the information will not be considered reasonable cause for failing to file a timely return or to pay the tax under section 6651. The written request should include the following information:

(i) The name and taxpayer identification number of the deemed transferor and of the grantor;

(i) A statement of the specific information requested from the Service;

(iii) In the case of a trustee or other agent, a certified copy of its appointment.

(k) Initial filing date. Notwithstanding any other provision of these regulations, the time for filing the Form 706-B shall be the date determined under paragraph (c) of this section or February 5, 1981, whichever is later.

There is a need for immediate guidance with respect to the provisions contained in this Treasury decision. For this reason, it is found impracticable to issue it with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of Title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in section 2622 and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (90 Stat. 1887, 68A Stat. 917, 26 U.S.C. 2622, 7805).

United Kingdom; permanent U.S. establishment; deduction for tax paid on U.S. income. A United Kingdom corporation that has a permanent establishment in the U.S. paid U.K. income tax on business profits attributable to its U.S. operation only because the corporation was a resident of the U.K. Section 906(b)(1)(B) of the Code is not contrary to any treaty provisions, and the corporation may not deduct the U.K. income tax paid on U.S. profits. However, the corporation may deduct the U.K. income tax paid on effectively connected income from another foreign country. Rev. Ruls. 55-532, 58-310, and 65-234 obsoleted.

Rev. Rul. 80-243

ISSUE

Is a United Kingdom corporation with a permanent establishment in the United States entitled to deduct, in computing its taxable income for United States income tax purposes, the United Kingdom income tax it paid that is attributable to operations of its United States permanent establishment?

FACTS

X, a United Kingdom corporation, has a United States branch that constitutes a permanent establishment within the meaning of:

(1) Article II(1)(l) of the United States-United Kingdom Income Tax Convention (Old Convention), T.D. 5569, 1947-2 C.B. 100, as last modified by a Supplementary Protocol, signed on March 17, 1966, and generally effective for taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1966, 1966-2 C.B. 582 (Old Supplementary Protocol); and (2) Article 5(1) of the New United States-United Kingdom Income Tax Convention (New Convention), 1980-21 I.R.B. 5 as modified by three Supplementary Protocols, signed, respectively, on August 26, 1976, March 31, 1977, and March 15, 1979, all generally effective for taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1975.

Pursuant to Article III(1) of the Old Convention and Article 7(1) of the New Convention, X is subject to and pays United States tax on its business profits attributable to the income from the branch operation. The branch earns income attributable to the United States trade or business from both United States and foreign sources.

On its 1974 and 1975 federal income tax returns, filed on a calendar year basis, X deducted United Kingdom income tax it paid on its business profits attributable to the income from the branch operation. The United Kingdom income tax paid by X was imposed solely because X was a resident of the United Kingdom.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Under section 882(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code a foreign corporation engaged in a trade or business within the United States during the taxable year shall be taxable on its taxable income which is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States. Section 882(c)(1)(A) provides that a foreign corporation shall be allowed deductions to the extent they are connected with income which is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States.

Section 164(a)(3) of the Code provides that state and local, and foreign income taxes shall be allowed as a deduction for the taxable year within which paid or accrued.

Section 906(b)(1)(B) of the Code provides a rule for determining the amount of foreign tax paid or accrued in order to determine deductions allowable to a foreign corporation under section 882(c). It states that there shall not be taken into account any amount of tax to the extent the tax so paid or accrued is imposed with respect to income from sources within the United States that would not be taxed by such foreign country but for the fact that such corporation was created or organized under the law of such foreign country or is domiciled for tax purposes in such country.

Under Article III(3) of the Old Convention, as modified by the Old Supplementary Protocol, in determining the industrial and commercial profits of a United States permanent establishment, deductions are allowed for all expenses that would be deductible if the permanent establishment were an independent enterprise, if they are reasonably connected with the taxable profits, wherever the expenses are incurred. Under Article 7(3) of the New Convention, in determining the profits of a United States permanent establishment, deductions are allowed for those expenses which are incurred for the purposes of the permanent establishment, wherever those expenses are incurred. Neither Article III(3) of the Old Convention nor Article 7(3) of the New Convention elaborates on what income tax expenses are allowed as deductions.

Article II(3) of the Old Convention and Article 3(2) of the New Convention provide that, with respect to the application of the respective Conventions by one of the Contracting Parties, any term not otherwise defined shall, unless the context otherwise requires, and subject to Article 25 (Mutual Agreement Procedure), have the meaning which it has under the laws of that Contracting Party relating to the taxes which are the subject of the Convention. Since neither Article II(3) of the Old Convention nor Article 3(2) of the New Convention elaborate on what income tax expenses are allowed as deductions, the context of those Articles does not otherwise require, and there has been no mutal agreement under Article 25(3), reference is made to United States internal law in accordance with Article II(3) of the Old Convention and Article 3(2) of the New Convention to determine what tax expenses are allowed as deductions.

Under the Code in effect at the time the Old Convention was signed, and subsequently at the time the Old Supplementary Protocol was signed and became effective, a deduction was allowed by United States internal tax law for a ratable portion of the United Kingdom income taxes paid by United Kingdom corporations in computing taxable income from sources within the United States. See Rev. Rul. 55-532, 1955-2 C.B. 592, as clarified by Rev. Rul. 58-310, 1958-1 C.B. 262. See also Rev. Rul. 65-234, 1965-2 C.B. 238. However, section 906(b)(1)(B) of the Code, added by the Foreign Investors Tax Act of 1966, Pub. L. 89-809, 1966-2 C.B. 656 (FITA), has the effect of denying this deduction unless the application of section 906(b)(1)(B) would be contrary to an existing treaty obligation, in which case section 110 of FITA provides that section 906(b)(1)(B) shall not apply.

The Old Convention as it is currently constituted does not contain a provision requiring that an interpretation be made with reference to internal law in effect on a particular date, although such references were included elsewhere in the Old Convention in the past. See, for example, Article XIII (1) of the Old Convention, prior to amendment by Article 9 of the Old Supplementary Protocol, which provided, with respect to the foreign tax credit applicable to certain dividends and royalties, that the credit would be allowed "[s]ubject to sections 901 to 905 of the United States Internal Revenue Code as in effect on the 1st day of January 1956." Therefore, in determining what income tax expenses are deductible by X for 1974 in computing its United States income tax liability under the Code, section 906(b)(1)(B) must be applied even though it was not in the Code at the time the Old Convention and the Old Supplemental Protocol became effective.

Section 110 of FITA does not prevent the application of section 906(b)(1)(B) under the Old Convention. Article III(3), as previously indicated, does not elaborate on what income tax expenses are allowed as deductions and section 906(b)(1)(B) is, therefore, not contrary to the Old Convention. Similarly, the provisions of section 906(b)(1)(B) are not contrary to Article 7(3) of the New Convention, which also does not address what income tax expenses are deductible. Therefore, pursuant to Articles II(3) and 3(2) of the Old and New Conventions, respectively, section 906(b)(1)(B) applied and precludes X from taking a deduction on its 1974 and 1975 federal income tax returns for foreign taxes that are paid with respect to income from sources within the United States that would not be taxed by the United Kingdom but for the fact that X is domiciled for tax purposes in the United Kingdom.

However, section 906(b)(1)(B) does not preclude X from taking a deduction for foreign taxes for its 1974 and 1975 taxable years that are paid with respect to income from foreign sources subject to taxation by the United States. To the extent that foreign source income subject to United States taxation is derived from the United Kingdom, then X may deduct any United Kingdom tax paid on such income for purpose of computing X's United States taxable income. To the extent that foreign source income subject to United States taxation is derived from a source other than the United Kingdom, the deduction for United Kingdom tax paid on such income is limited to any United Kingdom tax paid in excess of a United Kingdom tax credit allowed as a result of the payment of income tax to the foreign income source country.

HOLDINGS

A United Kingdom corporation having a permanent establishment in the United States cannot deduct, in computing its taxable income for United States purposes, United Kingdom income tax imposed solely because the corporation is a resident of the United Kingdom and paid with respect to income from sources within the United States. However, such corporation may deduct the amount of United Kingdom income tax it paid with respect to the permanent establishment's income from foreign sources attributable to its permanent establishment to the extent such tax exceeds the United Kingdom tax credit allowed as a result of payment of income tax to the foreign income source country. In this latter situation, in which the foreign income source country is not the United Kingdom, the corporation is also entitled to deduct any income taxes paid to such country subject to the limitations of section 906(b)(1)(B).

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Ruls. 55-532, 58-310 and 65-234 involve the deductibility of the United Kingdom income tax paid by United Kingdom corporations doing business in the United States with respect to income from sources within the United States prior to the enactment of section 906(b)(1)(B) of the Code. Consequently, these revenue ruling are obsoleted.

A list of these areas is set forth in section 4.01 of the revenue procedure.

Rev. Proc. 80-22 is amplified to include the following under section 4.01:

Sections 304 and 357.—Redemption Through Use of Related Corporation; Assumption of Liability.—A transaction similar to that described in Rev. Rul. 80-240, at page 8, holding that sections 304(a)(1) and 357(a) of the Code are inapplicable because there was no assumption of liability, unless the taxpayer can satisfy the Internal Revenue Service that the liability was incurred by the taxpayer as a mere intermediary agent for the newly created corporate transferee. To establish this, the taxpayer must submit to the Internal Revenue Service documented evidence, composed at the time the liability was incurred, which indicates that the unrelated lender had agreed to release the transferor-borrower from any and all obligation on the liability in favor of the corporate transferee. Further, the taxpayer must show, or represent to, the Internal Revenue Service that the transfer and assumption actually occurred, or will actually occur, within 12 months of the date the debt was incurred.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE

This revenue procedure will apply to all ruling requests on hand in the National Office on September 8, 1980, the date of publication of this revenue procedure in the Internal Revenue Bulletin, as well as to requests received thereafter.

SEC. 4. EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE PROCEDURES

Rev. Proc. 80-22 is amplified.

SEP IRAs—Employer Contributions

Announcement 80-112

Proposed regulations on the Simplified Employee Pension (SEP) will include several rules designed to alleviate certain problems faced by employers who contribute to a SEP. Until these proposed regulations are published, taxpayers may rely on the guidance provided below to resolve the issues specifically covered.

The Revenue Act of 1978, Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, added the SEP provisions to the Internal Revenue Code. These provisions allow employers to contribute to the Individual Retirement Account or Annuity (IRA) of each of their employees amounts which may exceed the normal limits on deductions for employee contributions to an IRA.

In order to utilize a SEP, an employer must comply with certain statutory requirements, including requirements pertaining to which employees must be allowed to participate in the SEP. Basically, an employer who makes payments to a SEP in a particular year must contribute on behalf of each employee who has attained age 25 and has worked for the employer during at least three of the immediately preceding five calendar years. The proposed regulations will provide, however, that employers need not contribute for a particular calendar year on behalf of an employee whose compensation was less than $200 for that calendar year.

An employer must contribute on behalf of all employees who met the SEP eligibility requirements during the year for which a contribution is made, including those individuals who no longer are employed by the employer on the SEP contribution date. Although the Service recognizes that this may present difficulties under certain circumstances, employers must contribute on behalf of these employees, including deceased employees, even if the present whereabouts of these individuals is unknown. If the individual either had not previously established an IRA or had established an IRA but had closed it prior to the employer's SEP contribution date for the current year, the employer is obligated to establish an IRA on behalf of each such employee.

Notice of the employer's SEP contribution is to be given in person or by mail to the last known address of such former employee. Employers who have made contributions on behalf of such employees must maintain records of such payments which include the names of such employees, the amounts contributed on behalf of each such employee, and the name and address of the institution where each such employee's account is maintained.

An IRA may satisfy the requirements of section 408 of the Code even though an employer establishes the IRA on behalf of an employee who otherwise has not set up an IRA to receive the employer's SEP contribution.

The proposed regulations will also provide that a SEP need not be established until the contribution is made for that particular calendar year. Thus, employers are not necessarily required to establish a SEP for a particular year by the last day of that calendar year.

Contributions made on behalf of individuals who are no longer employed by the employer at the end of the employer's taxable year will be considered timely even if made after the due date of the employer's tax return if they are made by December 31, 1980.

Announcement of the Disbarment, Suspension, or Consent to Voluntary Suspension of Attorneys, Certified Public Accountants, Enrolled Agents and Enrolled Actuaries from Practice before the Internal Revenue Service

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Rev. Rul. 80-245, page 6.

Research and experimental expenses; environmental impact studies. A public utility company conducted, and paid another organization to conduct, environmental impact studies to support its application to state regulatory agencies to expand its generating facilities. The expenses are not research and experimental expenditures within the meaning of section 174 of the Code. However, if not chargeable to a capital account, the expenses are deductible business expenses.

Rev. Rul. 80-246, page 7.

Transfer of foreign branch with losses; recapture of loss. The amount of gain that a domestic corporation must recognize as ordinary foreign source income pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201 on the incorporation of its foreign branch that had incurred annual losses since its creation is reduced by the amount of taxable income realized and recognized by the domestic corporation under section 904(f)(3)(A) of the Code, on the transfer of assets to the new foreign corporation; Rev. Rul. 78-201 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-247, page 9.

Transfer of foreign branch with losses; abandonment of certain assets. Losses that must be recaptured under Rev. Rul. 78-201, as a result of the incorporation of a foreign branch operation, include expenses directly related to branch property not transferred but abandoned as worthless; Rev. Rul. 78-201 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-248, page 10.

Interest; "reverse mortgage loan"; when deducted and when included. Interest on a "reverse mortgage loan" that is added monthly to the outstanding loan balance as it accrues is neither includible in a cash method lender's gross income nor deductible by a cash method borrower at the time it is added.

Rev. Rul. 80-249, page 11.

Residence; installment sale; election; gross profit. A taxpayer who realized a gain on the sale of a principal residence elected to exclude the gain under section 121 of the Code and elected to use the installment method of reporting income from the sale. In determining the amount of each installment payment that is reportable under the installment method of accounting, gross profit in the formula provided in section 453(a)(1) is the amount of the gain that is not excludable from gross income.

Rev. Rul. 80-251, page 5.

Industrial development bonds; security interest. The proceeds of bonds issued by a city will be loaned to developers of industrial buildings. Payments by the developers of principal and interest due on their loans will not be pledged as security for, and will not coincide with, debt service on the bonds. However, over the term of the bonds the payments by the developers will be approximately equal in present value to the debt service on the bonds. Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Prices: Domestic—$2.00 a single copy, $55.00 a year subscription; Foreign—$2.50 a single copy, $68.75 a year subscription.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 61.—Gross Income Defined

26 CFR 1.61-7: Interest.

Inclusion in gross income of interest on a reverse mortgage loan. See Rev. Rul. 80-248, page 10.

Section 103.—Interest on Certain Governmental Obligations

26 CFR 1.103-7: Industrial development bonds.
(Also Section 7805; 301.7805-1.)

Industrial development bonds; security interest. The proceeds of bonds issued by a city will be loaned to developers of industrial buildings. Payments by the developers of principal and interest due on their loans will not be pledged as security for, and will not coincide with, debt service on the bonds. However, over the term of the bonds the payments by the developers will be approximately equal in present value to the debt service on the bonds. Because the "trade or business test" and the "security interest test" will be satisfied, the bonds will be industrial development bonds within the meaning of section 103(b)(2) of the Code. Rev. Rul. 75-403 revoked.

Rev. Rul. 80-251

ISSUE

Will bonds that a city proposes to issue be "industrial development bonds" within the meaning of section 103(b)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

In order to provide loans to developers of industrial buildings, city M proposes to issue general obligation bonds that will be secured by M's full faith and credit. Bond proceeds will be paid by the bond purchaser to the city director of finance, who will remit the proceeds to the board of finance (board) for deposit in the board's bank account. The board will disburse the proceeds for approved loans as directed by an administrative body of M. Repayment by developers of all loans made from bond proceeds will be made to the board. The board will transfer the funds to the director of finance for credit to the general fund of M.

In its annual budget, M includes in its general fund all debt service (principal and interest payments) on all outstanding general obligations. M is required by state legislation to levy ad valorem taxes at a rate and in an amount sufficient to produce revenue to pay debt service on such obligations.

Substantially all of the loans of bond proceeds will be used by the developers in connection with the purchase, construction, or reconstruction of industrial buildings that will be leased or sold to persons who are not "exempt persons" within the meaning of section 103(b)(3) of the Code for use in their trades or businesses.

The industrial buildings purchased, constructed, or reconstructed with bond proceeds will not be pledged as security for payment of debt service on the bonds. M will secure all loans to the developers financed with the bond proceeds with mortgages on the facilities financed by the loans. Payments by the developers of principal and interest due with respect to loans made from bond proceeds will not be pledged as security for payment of debt service on the bonds and such payments will not match or coincide with debt service amounts due with respect to the bonds. The interest paid by the developers on the loans made from bond proceeds may be less than, equal to, or greater than the interest paid by M on the bonds. However, it is anticipated that over the term of the bonds the principal and interest payments to be made by the developers and the total debt service on the bonds will be approximately equal in present value.

The bonds will not be "arbitrage bonds" within the meaning of section 103(c) of the Code.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 103(a)(1) of the Code provides that gross income does not include interest on the obligations of a state or the political subdivision of a state.

Section 103(b)(1) of the Code provides that, except as otherwise provided in section 103(b), any industrial development bond shall be treated as an obligation that is not an obligation described in section 103(a)(1).

Section 103(b)(2) of the Code provides that the term "industrial development bond" means any obligation (A) that is issued as part of an issue all or a major portion of the proceeds of which are to be used directly or indirectly in any trade or business carried on by any person who is not an exempt person (as defined in section 103(b)(3)), and (B) the payment of the principal or interest on which (under the terms of such obligation or any underlying arrangement) is, in whole or in major part (i) secured by any interest in property used or to be used in a trade or business or in payments in respect of such property, or (ii) to be derived from payments in respect to property, or borrowed money, used or to be used in a trade or business.

Section 1.103-7(b)(3) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the trade or business test relates to the use of the proceeds of a bond issue. The test is met if all or a major portion (more than 25 percent) of the proceeds of a bond issue is used in a trade or business carried on by a nonexempt person. For example, if all or a major portion of the proceeds of a bond issue is to be loaned to one or more private business users, or is to be used to acquire, construct, or reconstruct facilities to be leased or sold to such private business users, and such proceeds or facilities are to be used in trades or businesses carried on by them, such proceeds are to be used in a trade or business carried on by persons who are not exempt persons, and the debt obligations comprising the bond issue satisfy the trade or business test.

Section 1.103-7(b)(4) of the regulations provides that the security interest test relates to the nature of the security for, and the source of, the payment of either the principal or interest on a bond issue. The nature of the security for, and the source of, the payment may be determined from the terms of the bond indenture or on the basis of an underlying arrangement. An underlying arrangement can be inferred from all the facts and circumstances.

Example (14) of section 1.103-7(c) of the regulations, which illustrates the existence of an underlying arrangement, reads as follows:

> J, a political subdivision of a State, will issue several series of bonds from time to time and will use the proceeds to rehabilitate urban areas. More than 25 percent of the proceeds of each issue will be used for the rehabilitation and construction of buildings which will be leased or sold to nonexempt persons for use in their trades or businesses. There is no limitation either on the number of issues or the aggregate amount of bonds which may be outstanding. No group of bondholders has any legal claim prior to any other bondholders or creditors with respect to specific revenues of J, and there is no arrangement whereby revenues from a particular project are paid into a trust or constructive trust, or sinking fund, or are otherwise segregated or restricted for the benefit of any group of bondholders. There is, however, an unconditional obligation by J to pay the principal and interest on each issue of bonds. Further, it is apparent that J requires the revenues from the lease or sale of buildings to nonexempt persons in order to pay in full the principal and interest on the bonds in question. The bonds are industrial development bonds because a major portion of the proceeds will be used in the trades or businesses of nonexempt persons and, pursuant to an underlying arrangement, payment of the principal and interest is, in major part, to be derived from payments in respect of property or borrowed money used in the trades or businesses of nonexempt persons.

An underlying arrangement will always be inferred if the payments to be made by the industrial user or users and the debt service on the bonds are approximately equal in present value. Other facts that tend to show an underlying arrangement are, first, that payments made by the industrial user or users are material to the security for the bonds, and second, that the identity of the industrial user or users can be determined with reasonable certainty at the time of issue.

In Rev. Rul. 75–403, 1975–2 C.B. 37, a state proposed to issue bonds in order to make loans to nursing homes to finance the costs necessary to meet federal and state safety standards. The bonds were to be secured by the full faith and credit of the state. The nursing home loan repayments, the assets financed by such loans, and any other security on the nursing home loans were not to be pledged as security for the payment of principal or interest on the proposed bonds. Rev. Rul. 75–403 holds that the security interest test contained in section 103 (c)(2) (redesignated section 103(b) (2)) of the Code will not be satisfied and the bonds will not be industrial development bonds.

In this case the bond proceeds will be loaned to developers for use in constructing or reconstructing industrial buildings that will be leased or sold to nonexempt persons. Because the building financed by the bond proceeds will be used in the trades or businesses of the nonexempt persons, the bond proceeds will be considered used in the trades or businesses of nonexempt persons and the "trade or business test" described in section 1.103-7(b)(3) of the regulations will be satisfied.

Although payments of principal of and interest on the loans by developers will not coincide with debt service on the bonds, an underlying arrangement can be inferred because the payments to be made by the developers and the debt service on the bonds are approximately equal in present value. Consequently, the payment of principal of and interest on M's bonds will be derived from payments in respect of property, or borrowed money, used or to be used in a trade or business within the meaning of section 103(b) (2)(B)(ii) of the Code. See example (14) of section 1.103-7(c) of the regulations. Therefore, the "security interest test" described in section 1.103-7(b)(4) will be satisfied.

The Service has reconsidered Rev. Rul. 75–403 and because Rev. Rul. 75–403 did not focus on whether an underlying arrangement would cause the security interest test to be satisfied, the Service will no longer follow that revenue ruling.

HOLDING

The bonds to be issued by M will be "industrial development bonds" within the meaning of section 103(b)(2) of the Code.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 75–403 is revoked.

PROSPECTIVE APPLICATION

Pursuant to the authority contained in section 7805(b) of the Code, this revenue ruling will not apply to obligations sold prior to September 15, 1980, the date this revenue ruling is published in the Internal Revenue Bulletin.

Section 121.—One-Time Exclusion of Gain from Sale of Principal Residence by Individual Who Has Attained Age 55

26 CFR 1.121-1: Gain from sale or exchange of residence of individual who has attained age 55.

Determination of the amount of each installment payment that is reportable under the installment method of accounting where the taxpayer elects to exclude gain pursuant to section 121 of the Code. See Rev. Rul. 80-249, page 11.

Section 163.—Interest

26 CFR 1.163-1: Interest deduction in general.

Deduction for interest on a reverse mortgage loan. See Rev. Rul. 80-248, page 10.

Section 174.—Research and Experimental Expenditures

26 CFR 1.174-2: Definition of research and experimental expenditures.

Research and experimental expenses; environmental impact studies. A public utility company conducted, and paid another organization to conduct, environmental impact studies to support its application to state regulatory agencies to expand its generating facilities. The expenses are not research and experimental expenditures within the meaning of section 174 of the Code. However, if not chargeable to a capital account, the expenses are deductible business expenses.

Rev. Rul. 80-245

ISSUE

Are the taxpayer's expenditures for environmental impact studies prepared in connection with the expansion of its facilities research and experimental expenditures within the meaning of section 174 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

In 1978, the taxpayer, a public utility company, planned expansion of its facilities for generating electricity. The taxpayer conducted various studies needed to support its application to be filed with state regulatory agencies for a construction permit to expand its facilities.

Because the taxpayer's expansion involved both the construction of a nuclear power plant and the installation of an ultra high voltage electric transmission line, the state regulatory agencies required that the taxpayer conduct several types of environmental impact studies for site selection. The studies measured specific site conditions and the resulting environmental impact of the construction and operation of the expanded facilities. Part of the studies were conducted directly by the taxpayer. The taxpayer used a research organization to conduct the remainder of the studies on its behalf.

During 1978, several studies were conducted either by the taxpayer or on its behalf. The studies identified suitable locations for the plant, ascertained the socio-economic impact of the plant on the surrounding community, ascertained the impact of the facility on the terrestrial ecology of the proposed site, considered the commercial disposition of fly ash waste generated by an alternative coal powered plant in order to meet state environmental standards, predicted noise levels at the construction site, considered the impact of construction and operation of the facilities on the aquatic environment of the inland streams located on two of the sites, and projected the air pollution and radiation emissions of the coal powered and nuclear powered facilities.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 174 of the Code allows a taxpayer to treat research or experimental expenditures paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year in connection with the taxpayer's trade or business as expenditures that are deductible.

Section 1.174-2(a)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the term "research and experimental expenditures" as used in section 174 of the Code means expenditures incurred in connection with the taxpayer's trade or business that represent research and development costs in the experimental or laboratory sense. The term includes generally all such costs incident to the development of an experimental or pilot model, a plant process, a product, a formula, an invention, or similar property, and the improvement of already existing property of the type mentioned. The term does not include expenditures such as those for the ordinary testing or inspection of materials or products for quality control or those for efficiency surveys, management studies, consumer surveys, advertising or promotions.

Section 1.174-2(a)(2) of the regulations provides that research and experimental expenditures include not only costs paid or incurred by the taxpayer for research and experimentaiton undertaken directly by the taxpayer, but also to expenditures paid or incurred for research or experimentation carried on in behalf of the taxpayer by another person or organization.

Rev. Rul. 67–401, 1967–2 C.B. 123, holds that expenses for legal and accounting work incurred by the taxpayer in obtaining a federal income tax ruling and a determination from a regulatory commission regarding the effect of a research and development project on the taxpayer's rate structure are not deductible as research and experimental expenditures under section 174(a) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 73–275, 1973–1 C.B. 134, holds that the cost of the taxpayer's product engineering department to develop and design a specially-built automated manufacturing system for a customer's specific order at the taxpayer's risk are deductible as research and experimental expenditures within the meaning of section 174 of the Code even though each product design results in the production of only one machine system.

In the present situation, the taxpayer conducted extensive studies in support of its application to expand its facilities for generating electricity. The studies were not incidental to the development of an experimental or pilot model, a plant process, a product, a formula, an invention or similar property. The facilities to be expanded by the taxpayer did not involve an experimental or pilot project. Rather, the studies represented a search for the effect of the construction on the surrounding environment to support the taxpayer's application with various regulatory agencies to expand its facilities.

HOLDING

The taxpayer's expenditures for environmental impact studies prepared in connection with the expansion of its facilities are not research and experimental expenditures within the meaning of section 174 of the Code. Whether such expenses are capital expenditures will depend upon the facts of the particular case. The expenses, if not chargeable to a capital account, are ordinary and necessary business expenses deductible under section 162(a).

Section 351.—Transfer to Corporation Controlled by Transferor

26 CFR 1.351-1: Transfer to corporation controlled by transferor.

Whether the nonrecognition of gain provisions of section 351 of the Code apply to a domestic person's transfer of the properties of its foreign branch that were used predominantly without the United States to a foreign corporation solely in exchange for all of the stock of such corporation. See Rev. Rul. 80-246, below.

Section 367.—Foreign Corporations

26 CFR 7.367(a)-1: Ruling requests under section 367 relating to certain transfers involving a foreign corporation.
(Also Sections 351, 904; 1.351-1.)

Transfer of foreign branch with losses; recapture of loss. The amount of gain that a domestic corporation must recognize as ordinary foreign source income pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201 on the incorporation of its foreign branch that had incurred annual losses since its creation is reduced by the amount of taxable income realized and recognized by the domestic corporation under section 904(f)(3)(A) of the Code, on the transfer of assets to the new foreign corporation; Rev. Rul. 78-201 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-246

ISSUE

Is the amount of gain that a domestic transferor (P) must recognize as ordinary foreign source income on the incorporation of its foreign branch operations, pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201, 1978-1 C.B. 91, because of losses incurred by the foreign operations prior to incorporation, reduced by the amount of taxable income realized and recognized to P, under section 904(f)(3)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code, upon the transfer of the branch assets to the new foreign corporation?

FACTS

P is a domestic corporation that is engaged in the manufacture and sale of plastic components for radio and television manufacturers in the United States. In 1977 P commenced these same activities in country A as a branch operation. For each of P's calendar taxable years, 1977, 1978, and 1979, the country A branch had a loss of 100*x* dollars (or a total of 300*x* dollars for this period) as a result of deductions taken by P under section 167 and certain other sections of the Code, for expenses incurred by its branch operations in country A. P had no other foreign operations and no other revenue, or losses, from sources without the United States during this period. In each of the years 1977, 1978, and 1979, the country A branch losses reduced the amount of P's income subject to federal income tax.

On January 1, 1980, P transferred the property used by the country A branch to a new country A corporation (Newco) in exchange for all of the Newco stock and Newco's assumption of P's liabilities attributable to its country A branch.

The fair market value of, and P's basis in, the assets transferred exceeded the sum of the liabilities assumed, plus the amount of the liabilities to which the tranfserred assets were subject. The excess of the fair market value of such property (assets transferred plus liabilities assumed) over P's adjusted basis therein exceeds P's overall foreign loss. Newco will continue to conduct the business that P conducted in country A. The foreign transferee, Newco, will not be engaged in a trade or business in the United States within the meaning of section 864 of the Code, and will have no income from sources within the United States within the meaning of section 861. The transfer of assets in exchange for stock would have fulfilled all of the requirements of section 351 had the transferee, Newco, been a domestic corporation. Furthermore, the transfer met the requirements of section 3.02(1) of Rev. Proc. 68-23, 1968-1 C.B. 821 (relating to transfers of property to foreign corporations). Within 183 days of the beginning of the transfer P requested a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that the transaction was not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes within the meaning of section 367(a)(1).

P agreed to recognize as gain on the transfer an amount of ordinary foreign source income equal to the sum of the country A branch losses previously incurred, pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201. However, P requested that this amount be reduced by the amount of taxable income it would realize and recognize, under section 904(f)(3)(A) of the Code, because of the transfer of its branch property to Newco.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

In Rev. Rul. 78-201 a domestic corporation operated a branch in a foreign country. The domestic corporation incurred losses in connection with its branch that reduced its worldwide income subject to federal income tax. The domestic corporation transferred the assets of its branch to a newly formed corporation in the foreign country in exchange for all of its stock. Income subsequently earned by the new corporation will therefore not be included in the domestic corporation's worldwide income subject to federal income tax. Since the transfer thus gives rise to a potential mismatching of related income and losses, Rev. Rul. 78-201 required the United States transferor (the domestic corporation) to recognize as gain on the transfer an amount of ordinary foreign source income equal to the sum of the branch losses previously incurred, as a condition for obtaining a ruling that the exchange was not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes within the meaning of section 367(a)(1) of the Code. Further, there was not an overall foreign loss, within the meaning of section 904, in Rev. Rul. 78-201.

In the instant case the losses incurred by the country A branch operations prior to its incorporation were taken into account by P and reduced the amount of P's income subject to federal income tax. As a result of the incorporation of P's country A branch operations, the income to be produced by these operations, that is indirectly attributable to the losses, will not be taken into account by P, and, thus, will not increase the amount of P's worldwide income subject to federal income tax. The effect of the incorporation will therefore be a mismatching of revenue, deductions, and credits, when income is finally produced. Accordingly, P must recognize as gain on the transfer, pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201, an amount of ordinary foreign source income equal to the sum of the branch A losses previously incurred ($300*x*), in order for P's exchange of property for Newco stock not to be in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes within the meaning of section 367(a)(1) of the Code. This income must be recognized as ordinary foreign source income by P for its taxable year in which the transfer occurred (1980).

Section 904(f)(1) of the Code provides, generally, that where an overall loss from foreign operations reduces United States tax on United States source income of the taxpayer, the tax benefit derived from this loss is recaptured when the taxpayer subsequently derives income from the foreign operations. In general, the recapture is accomplished by treating a portion of subsequently derived foreign income as taxable income from United States sources. Section 904(f)(3)(A) provides, generally, that for purposes of applying section 904(f)(1), when property that was used predominantly outside of the United States in a trade or business is disposed of, the overall foreign losses not previously recaptured under section 904(f)(1) will be recaptured in an amount equal to the lesser of the remaining losses or the excess of the fair market value of such property over its adjusted basis. This is accomplished by treating the gain realized on the disposition as taxable income from sources without the United States which section 904(f)(1) then treats as income from sources within the United States. Section 904(f)(3)(B)(i) provides that a disposition includes a sale or exchange of property whether or not gain or loss is recognized on the transfer.

In the instant case, P is required, therefore, to include in its taxable income for its 1980 taxable year, as income from sources within the United States, the amount specified in section 904(f)(3)(A) of the Code. Since P's overall foreign loss (300*x* dollars) was less than the amount realized on the transfer of the branch assets, and since the transfer constituted a disposition, P must realize and recognize 300*x* dollars in taxable income, for 1980, as foreign source income under section 904(f)(3)(A), and treat that amount as income from sources within the United States, pursuant to section 904(f)(1).

Section 904(f)(3)(A) of the Code and Rev. Rul. 78-201 operate independently of one another. To the extent there is an overlap of Rev. Rul. 78-201 and section 904(f)(3)(A), their effect on the transfer should be integrated in order to prevent double recapture.

HOLDING

The amount of gain that P must recognize as ordinary foreign source income (300*x* dollars, which is the sum of the branch losses) on the transfer of its branch assets to Newco in exchange for Newco stock, pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201, is reduced by the amount of taxable income realized and recognized by P, under section 904(f)(3)(A) of the Code, on the same transfer or disposition (300*x* dollars, which is the amount of the overall foreign loss).

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 78-201 is amplified.

26 CFR 7.367(a)-1: Ruling request under section 367 relating to certain transfers involving a foreign corporation.

Transfer of foreign branch with losses; abandonment of certain assets. Losses that must be recaptured under Rev. Rul. 78-201, as a result of the incorporation of a foreign branch operation, include expenses directly related to branch property not transferred but abandoned as worthless; Rev. Rul. 78-201 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-247

ISSUE

Do the losses recaptured under Rev. Rul. 78-201, 1978-1 C.B. 91, pursuant to incorporation of a branch operation, include expenses directly related to branch property not transferred but abandoned as worthless?

FACTS

P is a domestic corporation that is engaged in the exploration, development, and sale of mineral properties in the United States. P owns certain mineral properties in country A. In 1977 P commenced business operations in country A. These operations were carried on by a branch that P established in country A.

Beginning in 1977, deductions were taken by P under section 167 and certain other sections of the Code for expenses incurred by its branch operations. Because of these deductions the country A branch sustained losses of $100*x* in 1977, 1978, and 1979 (a total of $300*x*). P's taxable income from sources within the United States was $1,000*x* each year for 1977 through 1979, and the branch A losses reduced P's worldwide taxable income for these years. During each of the three years P's other foreign branches had income in excess of the losses of the branch in country A.

On January 1, 1980, P transferred certain assets of its country A branch to Newco, a corporation newly created under the laws of country A, solely in exchange for all of Newco's stock. The assets transferred consisted of certain equipment and those mineral properties located in country A that were expected to produce income in excess of expenses starting in 1982. The mineral properties of P's country A branch that had no commercial value were not transferred and will be abandoned as worthless. Expenses of $200*x* were directly attributable to the branch A properties transferred. Expenses of $100*x* were directly attributable to the branch A properties not transferred.

The fair market value of, and P's basis in, the assets transferred exceeded the sum of the liabilities to which the transferred assets were subject. No liabilities were assumed. Newco will continue to conduct the business that P conducted in country A. The foreign transferee, Newco, will not be engaged in a trade or business in the United States within the meaning of section 864 of the Code, and will have no income from sources within the United States within the meaning of section 861. The transfer of assets in exchange for stock would have fulfilled all of the requirements of section 351 had the transferee, Newco, been a domestic corporation. Furthermore, the transfer met the requirements of section 3.02(1) of Rev. Proc. 68-23, 1968-1 C.B. 821. Within 183 days of the beginning of the transfer P requested a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that the transaction was not in pursuance of a plan of tax avoidance within the meaning of section 367(a)(1).

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 367(a)(1) of the Code provides that if, in connection with any exchange described in section 351, there is a transfer of property by a United States person to a foreign corporation, for purposes of determining the extent to which gain shall be recognized on such transfer, a foreign corporation shall not be considered to be a corporation unless, pursuant to a request filed no later than the close of the 183rd day after the beginning of such transfer, it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary that such exchange is not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes.

Section 351(a) of the Code provides that no gain or loss shall be recognized if property is transferred to a corporation by one or more persons solely in exchange for stock or securities in such corporation and immediately after the exchange such person or persons are in control (as defined in section 368(c)) of the corporation.

Rev. Proc. 68-23 sets forth guidelines to be used by taxpayers and their representatives in connection with requests for rulings required under section 367 of the Code in respect of certain types of transactions involving foreign corporations. Section 3.02(1) of Rev. Proc. 68-23 relates to transfers to foreign corporations controlled by domestic transferors and provides that such a transfer of property will ordinarily receive favorable consideration where the transferred property is to be devoted by the transferee foreign corporation to the active conduct, in any foreign country, of a trade or business. It is contemplated that the transferee foreign corporation, in addition to the active conduct of a trade or business, will have need for a substantial investment in fixed assets in such business.

Section 2.02 of Rev. Proc. 68-23 provides, however, that in reviewing each request for ruling to determine whether a favorable section 367 ruling should be issued under the guidelines, the Service reserves the right to issue an adverse ruling if, based on all the facts and circumstances of a case, it is determined that the taxpayer has not established that tax avoidance is not one of the principal purposes of the transaction.

P's transfer of certain of its mineral properties to Newco solely in exchange for all of Newco's stock is an exchange described in section 351 of the Code, but unless it is established under section 367(a)(1) that the transfer to Newco was not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes, Newco will not be considered to be a corporation for purposes of section 351. Since the nonrecognition of gain provisions of section 351 apply only if Newco is considered to be a corporation, failure to satisfy section 367(a)(1) would therefore result in recognition of any gain realized by P on the transfer.

In Rev. Rul. 78-201 a domestic corporation operated a branch in a foreign country. The domestic corporation incurred losses in connection with its branch that reduced its worldwide income subject to federal income tax. The domestic corporation transferred the assets of its branch to a newly formed corporation in the foreign country in exchange for all of its stock. Income subsequently earned by the new corporation will therefore not be included in the domestic corporation's worldwide income subject to federal income tax. Since the transfer thus gives rise to a potential mismatching of related income and loss, Rev. Rul. 78-201 required the United States transferor (the domestic corporation) to recognize as gain on the transfer an amount of ordinary foreign source income equal to the sum of the branch losses previously incurred, as a condition for obtaining a ruling that the exchange was not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes within the meaning of section 367(a)(1) of the Code. Further, if the transferor recognizes the amount set forth in Rev. Rul. 78-201 as gain, then the transferor's basis in the stock received, and the corporation's basis in the property received from the transferor, will each be increased by the amount of gain recognized to the transferor pursuant to sections 358(a)(1) and 362(a), respectively, since the transaction qualifies as an exchange to which section 351 applies. Rev. Rul. 78-201 indicates that the domestic corporation operated a single branch and a single business in the foreign country, that the business of the branch had incurred the losses, and that it was the business of the branch that was being incorporated.

In the instant case the losses that P incurred in connection with its mineral exploration, development, and property sales business in country A had reduced the amount of P's worldwide income subject to federal income tax. As a result of the incorporation of P's country A business (that is, all properties that were not to be abandoned), the income to be produced by P's country A business will not be taken into account by P, and thus will not increase the amount of P's worldwide income subject to federal income tax.

P's mineral exploration, development, and property sales business in country A was a complete business operation in itself, and that business and the losses incurred by that business were unrelated to P's other worldwide business operations. Although the branch A properties that were transferred directly incurred losses of $200*x* and the branch A properties to be abandoned directly incurred losses of $100*x*, P's branch A was comprised of both the properties that were transferred and the properties that were not transferred. P effectively incorporated the entire branch A business. It was the business, and not the specific parcels of property, that incurred the losses.

HOLDING

Pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201, P must recognize as gain on the transfer an amount of ordinary foreign source income equal to the sum of the country A branch losses previously incurred (that is, $300*x*) in order for P's exchange of property for Newco stock not to be deemed to be in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes within the meaning of section 367(a)(1) of the Code. This income must be recognized as ordinary foreign source income by P for its taxable year in which the transfer occurred (1980).

Section 451.—General Rule for Taxable Year of Inclusion

26 CFR 1.451-2: Constructive receipt of income.
(Also Sections 61, 163, 461; 1.61-7, 1.163-1, 1.461-1.)

Interest; "reverse mortgage loan"; when deducted and when included. Interest on a "reverse mortgage loan" that is added monthly to the outstanding loan balance as it accrues is neither includible in a cash method lender's gross income nor deductible by a cash method borrower at the time it is added.

Rev. Rul. 80-248

ISSUES

When is interest on a "reverse mortgage loan" includible in the gross income of a lender and deductible by a borrower under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

A state permits various kinds of lending institutions located within the state to make reverse mortgage loans to individuals who own their own homes, which they occupy as their principal residence. A reverse mortgage loan is secured by a mortgage on the borrower's principal residence. A reverse mortgage loan is one in which the lending institution commits itself to a principal amount, not to exceed 80 percent of the appraised value of the property, which is paid to the borrower in installments over a period of months or years. Repayment of the loan is due when the principal amount has been fully paid to the borrower, the residence that secures the loan is sold, the borrower dies, or the borrower ceases to use the home as the borrower's principal residence. The loan agreement may provide that interest will be added to the outstanding loan balance monthly as it accrues. The outstanding loan balance is the current amount of money owed by the borrower to the lending institution and includes the total of the installments paid by the lender to date, the total accrued interest if any to date, and any other charges, such as taxes and insurance, paid to date by the lender upon the borrower's failure to make such payment. The primary purpose of the reverse mortgage loan is to enable elderly persons with limited incomes to remain in their homes.

A lending institution made a reverse mortgage loan to an individual who qualified for such a loan. The loan agreement provides that interest will be added to the outstanding loan balance monthly as it accrues. Both the lender and the borrower use the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

(1) Section 451 of the Internal Revenue Code provides that the amount of any item of gross income is includible in the gross income for the taxable year in which received by the taxpayer, unless, under the method of accounting used in computing taxable income, such amount is to be properly accounted for as of a different period.

Section 1.451-(a) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that income is includible in gross income for the taxable year in which it is actually or constructively received by the taxpayer, unless it is includible in a different year in accordance with the taxpayer's method of accounting.

Section 1.451-2(a) of the regulations provides that income although not actually reduced to a taxpayer's possession is constructively received by the taxpayer in the taxable year during which it is credited to the taxpayer's account, set apart for the taxpayer, or otherwise made available so that the taxpayer may draw upon it at any time, or so that the taxpayer could have drawn upon it during the taxable year if notice of intention to withdraw had been given. However, income is not constructively received if the taxpayer's control of its receipt is subject to substantial limitations or restrictions.

In this case, the loan agreement provides that interest will be added to the outstanding loan balance monthly as it accrues. However, this interest is not received by the bank, nor is it available to be drawn upon by the bank. Therefore, the bank is not in actual or constructive receipt of the interest when it is added to the outstanding loan balance.

(2) Section 163(a) of the Code allows as a deduction all interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness.

Section 461(a) of the Code provides that the amount of any allowable deduction shall be taken for the taxable year that is the proper taxable year under the method of accounting used in computing taxable income.

Section 1.461-1(a)(1) of the regulations provides that, under the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting, amounts representing allowable deductions shall, as a general rule, be taken into account for the taxable year in which paid.

If a taxpayer who uses the cash receipts and disbursement method of acounting owes interest on an obligation and gives a note to the creditor to cover the interest, the taxpayer has not paid the interest for federal income tax purposes. The payment occurs when the taxpayer pays the interest in cash or by transferring property. See McAdams v. Commissioner, 15 T.C. 231 (1950), aff'd 198 F.2d 54 (5th Cir. 1952); Bramer v. Commissioner, 6 T.C. 1027 (1946), aff'd 161 F.2d 185 (3rd Cir. 1947). See also Rev. Rul. 76-135, 1976-1 C.B. 114, which states that actual payments of cash are required as a basis for any deductions allowable to a taxpayer who uses the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

HOLDINGS

The interest is includible in the lender's gross income when it is actually or constructively received by the lender and is deductible by the borrower when it is actually paid by the borrower. Actual or constructive receipt or payment does not occur when the interest is added to the outstanding loan balance. Therefore, the interest is neither includible in the lender's gross income nor deductible by the borrower at that time.

Section 453.—Installment Method

26 CFR 1.453-1: Installment method of reporting income.
(Also Section 121; 1.121-1.)

Residence; installment sale; election; gross profit. A taxpayer who realized a gain on the sale of a principal residence elected to exclude the gain under section 121 of the Code and elected to use the installment method of reporting income from the sale. In determining the amount of each installment payment that is reportable under the installment method of accounting, gross profit in the formula provided in section 453(a)(1) is the amount of the gain that is not excludable from gross income.

Rev. Rul. 80-249

ISSUE

How is the amount of each installment payment that is reportable under the installment method of accounting determined when the taxpayer elects to exclude gain pursuant to section 121 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

During the taxable year, the taxpayer sold the taxpayer's principal residence for $300,000. The taxpayer's adjusted basis in the residence was $140,000 and the realized gain from the sale was $160,000 ($300,000 sales price less $140,000 adjusted basis).

The taxpayer satisfied the requirements of section 121 of the Code and made an election under that section to exclude from gross income $100,000 of the gain from the sale. The transaction satisfied the requirements of section 453(b), and the taxpayer also elected to report the taxable gain using the installment method of accounting provided by section 453. The taxpayer does not intend to purchase another principal residence, and therefore, section 1034 is not applicable.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 453(b) of the Code permits a taxpayer to report certain qualifying gains from the sale or other disposition of real property on the installment method of accounting in the manner prescribed in section 453(a). Section 453(a)(1) provides for reporting as income in each taxable year the proportion of the installment payments actually received in that year which the gross profit realized or to be realized bears to the total contract price.

Section 1.453-1(b) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that gross profit, in the case of the sale of real property, means the selling price less the adjusted basis as defined in section 1011 of the Code and the regulations thereunder.

Rev. Rul. 75, 1953-1 C.B. 83, and Rev. Rul. 65-155, 1965-1 C.B. 356, involve the use of the installment method in situations in which there is a partial nonrecognition of gain pursuant to the provisions of section 1034 of the Code, relating to gain on the sale of a principal residence, and section 1031(b), relating to gain from exchanges not solely in kind. In those revenue rulings, the recognized gain is substituted for the gross profit for purposes of determining the amount of each installment that is includible in gross income.

In the instant case, as in Rev. Rul. 75 and Rev. Rul. 65-155, only a portion of the realized gain on the sale is includible in gross income.

HOLDING

For purposes of determining the amount of each installment payment that is reportable under the installment method of accounting, gross profit in the formula provided in section 453(a)(1) of the Code is the amount of the gain that is not excludable from gross income under section 121. Thus, the taxpayer in this case must report as income in each year an amount equal to one fifth ($60,000/$300,000) of the installment payments received in that year.

Section 904.—Limitation on Credit

Whether sections 904(f)(3)(A) and 904(f)(1) recapture the remaining overall foreign loss when a domestic corporation transfers all of the properties of its foreign branch that were used predominantly without the United States to a newly formed foreign corporation solely in exchange for all of the stock of such corporation. Investment in United States property by controlled foreign corporations

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On April 23, 1979, the Federal Register published proposed regulations under sections 956 and 958 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (44 FR 23880). Amendments under sections 956(a), (b)(2), and 958 were proposed to conform the regulations to amendments made to the Code by section 1021 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1618). Amendments made under section 956 (c) were intended to clarify existing regulations. A public hearing was held on October 30, 1979. After consideration of all comments regarding the proposed amendments, this Treasury decision is adopted.

DISCUSSION

The proposed amendments made changes to the regulations under sections 956(b) and 958 to conform the regulations to amendments made to the Code by section 1021 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1618). In addition, amendments were made to the regulations under section 956 (c) to clarify existing regulations.

Proposed § 1.956-2(c)(2) dealing with indirect pledges or guarantees has been modified. Under the final regulations the pledge of stock of a controlled foreign corporation will be considered as an indirect pledge of the assets of the controlled foreign corporation only if at least 66⅔ percent of the voting power of the stock of the controlled foreign corporation is pledged and only if, in addition, the pledge of stock is accompanied by negative covenants or similar restrictions. This provision applies to pledges made after September 8, 1980.

Proposed § 1.956-2(c)(3) dealing with the facilitation of loans to shareholders has been eliminated. Although the Committee Report accompanying the Tax Reform Act of 1976 supports the position taken in the proposed regulations, a number of comments were received that the proposed section was too vague and could be misconstrued to cover situations not prohibited by section 956. Any need for specificity will be covered in rulings on particular facts. Examples (4) and (5) under proposed § 1.956-2(c)(3) have also been eliminated. Example (4) dealt with the operation of an effective date which has been modified and Example (5) dealt with the concept of facilitation.

A change was also made under proposed § 1.956-2(b)(1)(ix) in order to expand the concept of "when used" to include situations in which equipment has been purchased for use and not as yet used. Another change of a clarifying nature was made under § 1.956-2(b)(1)(ix) with respect to the definition of movable drilling rigs and other oil and gas exploration and exploitation equipment used on the continental shelf of the United States.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Jacob Feldman of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to the regulations are hereby adopted:

Par. 1. Paragraph (b) of § 1.956-1 is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (2) and (3) as subparagraphs (3) and (4), respectively, and by adding new subparagraph (2) to read as set out below:

§ 1.956-1 Shareholder's pro rata share of a controlled foreign corporation's increase in earnings invested in United States property.

* * * * *

(b) Amount of a controlled foreign corporation's investment of earnings in United States property. * * *

(2) Aggregate amount of United States property. For purposes of determining an increase in earnings invested in United States property for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1975, the aggregate amount of United States property held by a controlled foreign corporation at the close of—

(i) Any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1975, and does not include stock or obligations of a domestic corporation described in section 956(b)(2)(F) or movable property described in section 956(b)(2)(G).

(ii) The last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1976

Par. 2. Section 1.956-2 is amended as follows:

1. Paragraph (b)(1) is amended by revising subdivision (iii), by redesignating subdivision (viii) as subdivision (x), and by adding subdivisions (viii) and (ix) as set forth below.

2. Paragraph (c) is amended as follows:

a. Subparagraph (1) is amended by deleting "subparagraph (2)" from the first sentence and by inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraph (4)", and by deleting the last sentence and the examples.

b. Subparagraph (2) is redesignated as subparagraph (4) and new subparagraphs (2) and (3) are added to read as set forth below.

3. Paragraph (d)(1)(i) is revised by deleting "of paragraph (a)" from the first sentence, and by revising paragraph (d)(1)(i)(b) to read as set forth below.

4. Paragraph (d)(2) is revised by deleting "of paragraphs (a)(1)(iii) and (b)(1)(v)" from the first sentence.

§ 1.956-2 Definition of United States property.

(b) Exceptions—(1) Excluded property. * * *

(iii) Deposits with persons carrying on the banking business, unless the deposits serve directly or indirectly as a pledge or guarantee within the meaning of paragraph (c) of this section. See paragraph (e)(2) of § 1.956-1.

(viii) For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, the voting or nonvoting stock or obligations of an unrelated domestic corporation. For purposes of this subdivision, an unrelated domestic corporation is a domestic corporation which is neither a United States shareholder (as defined in section 951(b)) of the controlled foreign corporation making the investment, nor a corporation 25 percent or more of whose total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote is owned or considered as owned (within the meaning of section 958(b)) by United States shareholders of the controlled foreign corporation making the investment. The determination of whether a domestic corporation is an unrelated corporation is made immediately after each acquisition of stock or obligations by the controlled foreign corporations.

(ix) For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, movable drilling rigs or barges and other movable exploration and exploitation equipment (other than a vessel or an aircraft) which are used exclusively on the Continental Shelf (as defined in section 638) of the United States in the exploration for, development, removal or transportation of natural resources from or under ocean waters. Property of the kind described in this subdivision which is being constructed or is in storage or in transit within the United States meets the requirements of § 1.956-2(b)(1) defining excluded property if it is actually used on the Continental Shelf by the last day of the taxable year following the year of purchase, commencement of storage or commencement of transit, and has not been used by the taxpayer anyplace else. In general, the type of property which qualifies for the exception under this subdivision includes any movable property which would be entitled to the investment credit if used outside the United States in certain geographical areas of the Western Hemisphere pursuant to section 48(a)(2)(B)(x) (without reference to sections 49 and 50).

(c) Treatment of pledges and guarantees—(1) General rule. * * *

(2) Indirect pledge or guarantee. If the assets of a controlled foreign corporation serve at any time, even though indirectly, as security for the performance of an obligation of a United States person, then, for purposes of paragraph (c)(1) of this section, the controlled foreign corporation will be considered a pledgor or guarantor of that obligation. For this purpose the pledge of stock of a controlled foreign corporation will be considered as the indirect pledge of the assets of the corporation if at least 66⅔ percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote is pledged and if the pledge of stock is accompanied by one or more negative covenants or similar restrictions on the shareholder effectively limiting the corporation's discretion with respect to the disposition of assets and the incurrence of liabilities other than in the ordinary course of business. This paragraph (c)(2) applies only to pledges and guarantees which are made after September 8, 1980. For purposes of this paragraph (c)(2) a refinancing shall be considered as a new pledge or guarantee.

(3) Illustrations. The following examples illustrate the application of this paragraph (c):

Example (1). A, a United States person, borrows $100,000 from a bank in foreign country X on December 31, 1964. On the same date controlled foreign corporation R pledges its assets as security for A's performance of A's obligation to repay such loan. The place at which or manner in which A uses the money is not material. For purposes of paragraph (b) of § 1.956-1, R Corporation will be considered to hold A's obligation to repay the bank $100,000, and, under the provisions of paragraph (e)(2) of § 1.956-1, the amount taken into account in computing R Corporation's aggregate investment in United States property on December 31, 1964, is the unpaid principal amount of the obligation on that date ($100,000).

Example (2). The facts are the same as in example (1), except that R Corporation participates in the transaction, not by pledging its assets as security for A's performance of A's obligation to repay the loan, but by agreeing to buy for $100,000 at maturity the note representing A's obligation if A does not repay the loan. Separate arrangements are made with respect to the payment of the interest on the loan. The agreement of R Corporation to buy the note constitutes a guarantee of A's obligation. For purposes of paragraph (b) of § 1.956-1, R Corporation will be considered to hold A's obligation to repay the bank $100,000, and, under the provisions of paragraph (e)(2) of § 1.956-1, the amount taken into account in computing R Corporation's aggregate investment in United States property on December 31, 1964, is the unpaid principal amount of the obligation on that date ($100,000).

Example (3). A, a United States person, borrows $100,000 from a bank on December 10, 1981, pledging 70 percent of the stock of X, a controlled foreign corporation, as collateral for the loan. A and X use the calendar year as their taxable year. In the loan agreement, among other things, A agrees not to cause or permit X Corporation to do any of the following without the consent of the bank:

(a) Borrow money or pledge assets, except as to borrowings in the ordinary course of business of X Corporation;

(b) Guarantee, assume, or become liable on the obligation of another, or invest in or lend funds to another;

(c) Merge or consolidate with any other corporation or transfer shares of any controlled subsidiary;

(d) Sell or lease (other than in the ordinary course of business) or otherwise dispose of any substantial part of its assets;

(e) Pay or secure any debt owing by X Corporation to A; and

(f) Pay any dividends, except in such amounts as may be required to make interest or principal payments on A's loan from the bank.

A retains the right to vote the stock unless a default occurs by A. Under paragraph (c)(2) of this section, the assets of X Corporation serve indirectly as security for A's performance of A's obligation to repay the loan and X Corporation will be considered a pledgor or guarantor with respect to that obligation. For purposes of paragraph (b) of § 1.956-1, X Corporation will be considered to hold A's obligation to repay the bank $100,000 and under paragraph (e)(2) of § 1.956-1, the amount taken into account in computing X Corporation's aggregate investment in United States property on December 31, 1981, is the unpaid principal amount of the obligation on that date.

(d) Definitions—(1) Meaning of "acquired". (i) Applicable rules. For purposes of this section—

* * * * *

(b) Property which is an obligation of a United States person with respect to which a controlled foreign corporation is a pledgor or guarantor (within the meaning of paragraph (c) of this section) shall be considered acquired when the corporation becomes liable as a pledgor or guarantor or is otherwise considered a pledgor or guarantor (within the meaning of paragraph (c)(2) of this section); and

* * * * *

Par. 3. Section 1.958-2 is amended as follows:

1. The first sentence of paragraph (a) is revised as set out below.

2. Subparagraph (b)(3) is amended by adding a new sentence immediately after the first sentence as set forth below.

3. Subparagraph (d)(2) is amended by adding a new sentence immediately after the first sentence as set forth below.

§ 1.958-1 Constructive ownership of stock.

(a) In general. Section 958(b) provides that, for purposes of sections 951(b), 954(d)(3), 956(b)(2), and 957, the rules of section 318(a) as modified by section 958(b) and this section shall apply to the extent that the effect is to treat a United States person as a United States shareholder within the meaning of section 951(b), to treat a person as a related person within the meaning of section 954(d)(3), to treat the stock of a domestic corporation as owned by a United States shareholder of a controlled foreign corporation under section 956(b)(2), or to treat a foreign corporation as a controlled foreign corporation under section 957. * * *

(b) Members of family. * * *

(3) Stock owned by nonresident alien individual. * * * However, this limitation does not apply for purposes of determining whether the stock of a domestic corporation is owned or considered as owned by a United States shareholder under section 956(b)(2) and § 1.956-2(b)(1)(viii). * * *

(d) Attribution to partnerships, estates, trusts, and corporations. * * *

(2) Limitation. * * * This limitation does not apply for purposes of determining whether the stock of a domestic corporation is owned or considered as owned by a United States shareholder under section 956(b)(2) and § 1.956-2(b)(1)(viii). * * *

(This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 956(c) and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (76 Stat. 1017, 68A Stat. 917; 26 U.S.C. 956(c) and 26 U.S.C. 7805 respectively).)

Section 2053.—Expenses, Indebtedness, and Taxes

26 CFR 20.2053-3: Deductions for expenses of administering estate.
(Also Sections 6161, 6163, 6166, 6166A; 20.6161-1, 20.6163-1, 20.6166-1, 20.6166A-1.)

Administration expenses; interest on federal estate tax; when deductible. Interest expense charged on the extended payment of federal estate tax is deductible when the interest accrues. No deduction is allowable on the estate tax return for an estimate of interest expense to be incurred in the future.

Rev. Rul. 80-250

ISSUE

When does interest expense charged pursuant to the executor's election to extend payment of the estate tax liability become deductible under section 2053(a)(2) of the Code?

FACTS

The decedent, D, died in 1978. The executor of D's estate elected to pay a portion of the estate tax liability in installments in accordance with the provisions of section 6166A of the Code. In preparing the federal estate tax return for D's estate, the executor estimated the total amount of interest expense that would be incurred by the estate in the future with respect to the section 6166A election. The exector claimed a deduction for this estimated amount of future expense as an expense of administration under section 2053(a)(2) of the Code.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2053(a)(2) of the Code and section 20.2053-3(a) of the Estate Tax Regulations provide an estate tax deduction for administration expenses that are actually and necessarily incurred in the administration of the decedent's estate and are allowable by the laws of the jurisdiction under which the estate is being administered.

Sections 20.2053-1(b)(3) and 20.2053-3(a) of the regulations provide that if the amount of an expense otherwise deductible under section 2053 of the Code is not actually incurred (i.e. accrued) at the time of the final audit of the estate tax return, then no deduction will be allowed for the expense at that time, unless the expense is ascertainable with reasonable certainty. No deduction can be taken based on a vague or uncertain estimate.

Interest expense payable incident to the extension of the time for payment of tax under section 6166A is deductible as an expense of administration under section 2053(a)(2) of the Code, if the expense is allowable under the laws of the jurisdiction in which the estate is being administered. Estate of Bahr v. Commissioner, 68 T.C. 74 (1977), acq. 1978-1 C.B. 1. See also, Rev. Rul. 78-125, 1978-1 C.B. 292.

In situations where the executor elects to extend the time for the payment of the estate tax under section 6166A the executor has the option to accelerate payment, and in certain circumstances must accelerate payment. See section 6166A(h) of the Code. The possibility that payment may be accelerated renders any estimate of future interest charges vague and uncertain, within the meaning of section 20.2053-1(b)(3) of the regulations.

Accordingly, interest expense incurred under section 6166A is deductible when the interest accrues. When the interest becomes deductible and the estate claims the deduction under section 2053(a)(2), the estate tax is recomputed. The recomputation will result in a reduction of the estate tax and previously accrued interest. Installments due will be recomputed accordingly. However, no refund will be made until the entire tax liability has been paid. Interest accrues daily. However, for purposes of administrative convenience taxpayers should claim the deduction at the time of the annual dates prescribed for payment under section 6166A. If the entire tax balance and accrued interest is prepaid at one time, the accrued interest is deductible at that time.

HOLDING

Interest expense charged pursuant to the executor's election to extend payment of the estate tax liability is deductible when the interest accrues. Therefore, no deduction is allowable on D's estate tax return for the estimate of interest expense to be incurred in the future.

The conclusion of this revenue ruling applies as well to interest on estate tax, the payment of which is extended under sections 6161, 6163 or 6166 of the Code.

Rev. Proc. 80-35

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to amend Sec. 2 and Sec. 3.03 of Rev. Proc. 78-35, 1978-2 C.B. 536, which provides instructions for implementing the provisions of section 530 of the Revenue Act of 1978, Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 119, relating to the employment tax status of independent contractors and employees.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

Rev. Proc. 78-35 is modified to reflect changes made to section 530 of the Act by Pub. L. 96-167, 1980-5 I.R.B. 12, 14, pertaining to the extension of certain dates in section 530 of the Act.

SEC. 3. IMPLEMENTATION

.01 Sec. 2 of Rev. Proc. 78-35 is modified to read as follows:

"Section 530(a)(1) of the Act, as amended, provides that if, for purposes of the employment taxes under subtitle C of the Internal Revenue Code, a taxpayer did not treat an individual as an employee for any period ending before January 1, 1981, then the individual will be deemed not to be an employee for that period, unless the taxpayer had no reasonable basis for not treating the individual as an employee. For any period during 1979 or 1980, the relief applies only if (1) all federal tax returns (including information returns) required to be filed by the taxpayer with respect to the individual for the period are filed on a basis consistent with the taxpayer's treatment of the individual as not being an employee, and (2) the treatment is consistent with the treatment for periods beginning after December 31, 1977."

.02 Sec. 3.03 of Rev. Proc. 78-35 is modified to read as follows:

".03 Consistency in 1979 and 1980

The relief under section 530(a)(1) of the Act, as amended, does not apply to the employment tax treatment of any individual for any period during 1979 or 1980, if the taxpayer (or a predecessor) treated any individual holding a substantially similar position as an employee for employment tax purposes for any period beginning after December 31, 1977. This provision prevents taxpayers from changing the way they treat workers solely to take advantage of the relief provisions. The application of this provision to predecessors is intended to prevent evasion of this rule, for example, by reincorporations. H.R. Rep. No. 95-1748, indicates that it is expected that legislation is to be developed to clarify the employment tax status of individuals."

SEC. 4. EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

Rev. Proc. 78-35 is modified.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

Form 1138, Extension of Time for Payment of Taxes by a Corporation Expecting a Net Operating Loss Carryback, Revised

Announcement 80-116

Form 1138, Extension of Time for Payment of Taxes by a Corporation Expecting a Net Operating Loss Carryback, has been revised to clarify the filing deadline. Form 1138 must be filed within the tax year of the expected net operating loss but before the tax to be postponed for the preceding year is required to be paid.

Forms 1138 (Rev. July 1980) are now available in Service offices.

Form 4789, Currency Transaction Report, Revised

Announcement 80-117 [1]

Banks and other financial institutions are subject to new rules governing the reports they must file on their individual customer currency transactions over $10,000.

Under the new rules, a financial institution must file a report within 15 days after the transaction and keep a copy of the report for five years. The institution also must verify and record more specific information about the customer's identity. The regulations further limit an institution's authority to exempt transactions from reporting and require that the institution keep a record of all exemption authorizations.

The changes, effective July 7, 1980, are described in regulations published in the Federal Register on June 5, 1980, dealing with financial recordkeeping and reporting of currency and foreign transactions under Title 31, Code of Federal Regulations, Part 103.

Such transactions are reported on Form 4789, Currency Transaction Report, which is being revised along with the related instructions to reflect the new rules. The revised form should be available at Service district offices in September. Until then, financial institutions should use the current Forms 4789 and include the information required by the new regulations.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

(Vol. 2), 1]. These regulations provide the public with guidance needed for determining whether a residential energy credit is available with respect to certain expenditures.

DATE: The amendments are effective with respect to expenditures made after April 19, 1977, and before January 1, 1986.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On May 23, 1979, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under sections 44C and 1016 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and to the Statement of Procedural Rules (26 CFR Part 601). The amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 101 of the Energy Tax Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 3175). A public hearing was held on September 12, 1979. After consideration of all comments regarding the proposed amendments, those amendments are adopted as revised by this Treasury decision. A new § 1.44C-6 is added to deal with the procedure and criteria for additions to the list of energy-conserving components or renewable energy sources which was previously the subject of § 1.44C-5. Section 1.44C-6 is reserved in this Treasury decision and will be dealt with in another regulation project. It should be noted that this Treasury decision does not reflect any of the amendments to section 44C made by the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 [Pub. L. 96-223, 1980-3 C.B. 2].

The effectiveness of these regulations will be evaluated on the basis of comments and information received from the public, other Government agencies, and offices within the Treasury Department and Internal Revenue Service. Under the regulations, no additional reporting or filing requirements have been imposed on taxpayers.

IN GENERAL

The Energy Tax Act of 1978 provides a residential energy credit for insulation, certain other energy-conserving components, and certain renewable energy source property expenditures made in connection with the taxpayer's principal residence. In the case of insulation and other energy-conserving components, the credit is 15 percent of the first $2,000 of expenditures, for a maximum credit of $300. In the case of solar, wind, and geothermal energy property, the credit provided by the 1978 Act is 30 percent of the first $2,000 of expenditures and 20 percent of the next $8,000 of expenditures, for a maximum credit of $2,200 for expenditures made after April 19, 1977 and before January 1, 1980. It should be noted that the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 has increased the credit for solar, wind, and geothermal property to 40 percent of $10,000 for a maximum of $4,000 for expenditures made after December 31, 1979 and before January 1, 1986. The taxpayer must reduce the maximum amount of allowable expenditures with respect to the dwelling unit to be used in computing the credit by the prior expenditures which were made by the taxpayer, and which were taken into account in computing the credit for prior taxable years.

The credit applies only to expenditures made on or after April 20, 1977, and before January 1, 1986. A credit with respect to expenditures made during 1977 (i.e., on or after April 20) is to be claimed on the taxpayer's 1978 tax return. In the case of insulation and other energy-conserving component expenditures, the credit is available only with respect to a taxpayer's principal residence the construction (including reconstruction) of which was substantially completed before April 20, 1977. To the extent that the credit exceeds the taxpayer's tax liability, the taxpayer is allowed to carry over the unused credit to subsequent taxable years beginning before January 1, 1988.

DEFINITIONS OF QUALIFIED ITEMS

A number of comments requested that the definitions of various items qualifying for the credit be expanded, e.g., that the definition of insulation be expanded to include awnings and shades; that the definition of a storm or thermal window be revised to include window films; and that the definition of solar energy property be made to include woodburning stoves or heat pumps. The regulations have not been expanded to include these items because we believe that Congress did not intend their inclusion. In the case of insulation, the regulations have been clarified to provide that an item must be installed between a conditioned area (i.e., heated or cooled by conventional or renewable energy source means) and a nonconditioned area to qualify as insulation (except when installed on a water heater, water pipe, or heating/cooling duct).

[1] This publication of the Treasury Decision contains the complete text of the amendments to the regulations. The instructions for modifying the notice of proposed rulemaking have been omitted.

It was suggested that the definition of a storm or thermal window should be in terms of R-values, rather than inches of insulating material. The regulations have been amended to reflect this suggestion.

Several comments suggested that the rule excluding materials and components having a dual purpose from the definition of solar energy property be deleted. It was argued that this rule would disqualify most expenditures for passive solar construction or for modifications to an existing structure. Additional comments requested that the regulations be revised to allow a partial credit for materials and components that serve a dual purpose. The dual purpose rule was not deleted or modified to allow a partial credit in view of the support for the exclusion found in the House and Senate reports to the Act which clearly require the exclusion of property with a significant structural function.

However, the regulations have been revised to include a more comprehensive definition of a passive solar system. The final regulations provide that a qualifying passive solar system used for heating purposes must be composed of the following components: a solar collection area, an absorber, a storage mass, a heat distribution method, and heat regulation devices.

In response to inquiries, the definition of wind energy property has been revised to make it clear that devices that use wind merely to ventilate do not qualify as wind energy property.

The residential energy credit applies to property which transmits or uses energy derived from a geothermal deposit to heat or cool a dwelling or provide hot water for use within the dwelling. Several comments suggested that the definition of geothermal deposit be revised either by deleting the 60° Celsius temperature limitation or by lowering the temperature limitation. The temperature limitation has been lowered to 50° Celsius. It has been concluded that 50° Celsius is an appropriate measure for determining whether heat is derived from geothermal reservoirs (heated by the earth's magma) or is derived from heat associated with ground water that is affected by atmospheric temperatures.

DEFINITION OF CONSTRUCTION

One comment objected to defining reconstruction as construction for purposes of the April 20, 1977, cut-off date for new construction. This objection was rejected on the ground that a house that is reconstructed is basically a new house. Therefore, the cut-off date pertaining to new construction should also be applicable to reconstruction.

CERTIFICATION PROCEDURE

One comment suggested that the regulations be revised to allow request from any source for certification of items as qualifying for the credit. This suggestion was not adopted because the statute only authorizes the manufacturer to seek certification of an item.

It should be noted that the certification procedure is the subject of Rev. Proc. 80-36 [page , this Bulletin].

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation is Walter H. Woo of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to 26 CFR Part 1 are hereby adopted:

Paragraph 1. There are inserted immediately after § 1.44-5 the following new sections:

§ 1.44C-1 Residential energy credit.

(a) General rule. Section 44C provides a residential energy credit against the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code. The credit is an amount equal to the individual's qualified energy conservation expenditures (set out in paragraph (b)) plus the individual's qualified renewable energy source expenditures (set out in paragraph (c)) for the taxable year. However, the credit is subject to the limitations described in paragraph (d) and the special rules contained in § 1.44C-3. The credit is nonrefundable (that is, the credit may not exceed an individual's tax liability for the taxable year). However, any unused credit may be carried over to succeeding years to the extent permitted under paragraph (e). Renters as well as owners of a dwelling unit may qualify for the credit. See § 1.44C-3(h) for the rules relating to the allocation of the credit in the case of joint occupants of a dwelling unit.

(b) Qualified energy conservation expenditures. In the case of any dwelling unit, the qualified energy conservation expenditures are 15 percent of the energy conservation expenditures made by the taxpayer with respect to the dwelling unit during the taxable year, but not in excess of $2,000 of such expenditures. See § 1.44C-2(a) for the definition of energy conservation expenditures.

(c) Qualified renewable energy source expenditures. In the case of any dwelling unit, the qualified renewable energy source expenditures are the renewable energy source expenditures made by the taxpayer with respect to the dwelling unit during the taxable year, but not in excess of—

(1) 30 percent of the expenditures up to $2,000, plus

(2) 20 percent of the expenditures over $2,000, but not more than $10,000.

See § 1.44C-2(b) for the definition of renewable energy source expenditures.

(d) Limitations—(1) Minimum dollar amount. No residential energy credit shall be allowed with respect to any return (whether joint or separate) for any taxable year if the amount of the credit otherwise allowable (determined without regard to the tax liability limitation imposed by paragraph (d)(3) of this section) is less than $10.

(2) Prior expenditures taken into account—(i) In general. For purposes of determining the credit for expenditures made during a taxable year, the taxpayer must reduce the maximum amount of allowable expenditures with respect to the dwelling unit in computing qualified energy conservation expenditures (under paragraph (b)) or qualified renewable energy conservation expenditures (under paragraph (c)) by prior expenditures which were made by the taxpayer or by joint occupants (see § 1.44C-3(h)) with respect to the same dwelling unit, and which were taken into account in computing the credit for prior taxable years. The reduction of the maximum amount under paragraph (c) must first be made with respect to the first $2,000 of expenditures (to which a 30 percent rate applies) and then with respect to the next $8,000 of expenditures (to which a 20 percent rate applies). This reduction must be made if all or any part of the credit was allowed in or was carried over from a prior taxable year.

(ii) Change of principal residence. A taxpayer is eligible for the maximum credit for qualifying expenditures made with respect to a new principal residence notwithstanding the allowance of a credit for qualifying expenditures made with respect to the taxpayer's previous principal residence. Furthermore, except in certain cases involving joint occupancy (see §1.44C-3(h)), a taxpayer is eligible for the maximum credit notwithstanding the allowance of a credit to a prior owner of the taxpayer's new principal residence.

(iii) Example. The rules with respect to the reduction for prior expenditures are illustrated by the following example:

Example. In 1978, A has $1,000 of energy conservation expenditures and $5,000 of renewable energy source expenditures in connection with A's principal residence. A's residential energy credit for 1978 is $1,350, made up of $150 of qualified energy conservation expenditures (15 percent of $1,000) plus $1,200 of qualified renewable energy source expenditures (30 percent of the first $2,000 plus 20 percent of the next $3,000). In 1979 A has an additional $2,000 of energy conservation expenditures and $3,000 of renewable energy source expenditures in connection with the same principal residence. A's residential energy credit for 1979 is $750, made up of $150 of qualified energy conservation expenditures (15 percent of the new maximum $1,000, which was reduced from $2,000 by $1,000 of energy conservation expenditures taken into account in 1978) plus $600 of qualified renewable energy source expenditures (20 percent of $3,000, which reflects the reduction of the maximum allowable expenditures by the $5,000 of renewable energy source expenditures taken into account in 1978). The maximum residential energy credit allowable to A with respect to the same principal residence in subsequent years in which the credit is allowable is $400 (20 percent of the new maximum of $2,000 for renewable energy source expenditures and none for energy conservation expenditures).

(3) Tax liability limitation. The credit allowed by this section shall not exceed the amount of the tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for the taxable year, reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under—

(i) Section 32 (relating to tax withheld at source on nonresident aliens and foreign corporations and on tax-free covenant bonds),

(ii) Section 33 (relating to the taxes of foreign countries and possessions of the United States),

(iii) Section 37 (relating to retirement income),

(iv) Section 38 (relating to investment in certain depreciable property),

(v) Section 40 (relating to expenses of work incentive programs),

(vi) Section 41 (relating to contributions to candidates for public office),

(vii) Section 42 (relating to the general tax credit),

(viii) Section 44 (relating to purchase of new personal residence),

(ix) Section 44A (relating to expenses for household and dependent care services), and

(x) Section 44B (relating to employment of certain new employees).

(e) Carryover of unused credit. If the credit allowable by this section exceeds the tax liability limitation imposed by section 44C(b)(5) and paragraph (d)(3) of this section, the excess credit shall be carried over to the succeeding taxable year and added to the credit allowable under this section for the succeeding taxable year. A carryover that is not used in the succeeding year because it exceeds the tax liability limitation shall be carried over to later taxable years until used, except that no excess credit may be carried over to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1987.

§ 1.44C-2 Definitions.

For purposes of section 44C and the regulations thereunder—

(a) Energy conservation expenditures—(1) In general. The term "energy conservation expenditure" means an expenditure made on or after April 20, 1977, and before January 1, 1986, by a taxpayer for insulation or any other energy-conserving component, or for labor costs allocable to the original installation of such insulation or other component, if all of the following conditions are satisfied:

(i) The insulation (as defined in paragraph (c)) or other energy-conserving component (as defined in paragraph (d)) is installed in or on a dwelling unit that is used as the taxpayer's principal residence when the installation is completed. See § 1.44C-3(e) for the definition of principal residence.

(ii) The dwelling unit is located in the United States (as defined in section 7701(a)(9)).

(iii) The construction of the dwelling unit was substantially completed before April 20, 1977. See § 1.44C-3 (f) for the definition of the terms "construction" and "substantially completed". In the case of expenditures made with respect to the enlargement of a dwelling unit, the construction of the enlargement must have been substantially completed before April 20, 1977.

(2) Examples. The application of this paragraph may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). In 1978, A spent $500 for the purchase and installation of new storm windows to replace old storm windows, $100 to reinstall old storm windows, and $150 to transfer to A's house insulation which had been installed in A's garage. Only the $500 spent for new storm windows qualifies as an energy conservation expenditure. The $100 spent to reinstall storm windows and the $150 spent to transfer insulation to A's house do not qualify since the only installation costs that qualify are those for the original installation of energy conservation property the original use of which commences with the taxpayer.

Example (2). In June 1977, B purchased for B's principal residence a new house that was substantially completed before April 20, 1977. Pursuant to B's request the builder installed storm windows on May 1, 1977, the cost of this option being included in the purchase price of the house. The portion of the purchase price of the residence allocable to the storm windows constitutes an energy conservation expenditure.

However, no other part of the purchase price may be allocated to energy conservation property (insulation and other energy conserving components) installed before April 20, 1977. To qualify as an energy conservation expenditure, an expenditure must be made (i.e., installation of the energy conservation property must be completed) on or after April 20, 1977.

(b) Renewable energy source expenditures. The term "renewable energy source expenditure" means an expenditure made on or after April 20, 1977, and before January 1, 1986, by a taxpayer for renewable energy source property (as defined in paragraph (e)), or for labor costs properly allocable to the on-site preparation, assembly, or original installation of such property, if both of the following conditions are satisfied:

(1) The renewable energy source property is installed in connection with a dwelling unit that is used as the taxpayer's principal residence when the installation is completed. See § 1.44C-3(e).

(2) The dwelling unit is located in the United States (as defined in section 7701(a)(9)).

Eligibility as a renewable energy source expenditure does not depend on the date of construction of the dwelling unit. Thus, such an expenditure may be made in connection with either a new or an existing dwelling unit. Renewable energy source expenditures need only be made in connection with a dwelling, rather than in or on a dwelling unit. For example, a solar collector that otherwise constitutes renewable energy source property is not ineligible merely because it is installed separately from the dwelling unit. The term "renewable energy source expenditure" does not include any expenditure allocable to a swimming pool even when used as an energy storage medium or to any other energy storage medium whose primary function is other than the storage of energy. It also does not include the cost of maintenance of an installed system or the cost of leasing renewable energy source property.

(c) Insulation. The term "insulation" means any item that satisfies all of the following conditions:

(1) The item is specifically and primarily designed to reduce, when installed in or on a dwelling or on a water heater, the heat loss or gain of such dwelling or water heater. To qualify as insulation the item must be installed between a conditioned area and a nonconditioned area (except when installed on a water heater, water pipe, or heating/cooling duct). Thus, for example, awnings do not qualify as insulation. For purposes of this section the term "conditioned area" means an area that has been heated or cooled by conventional or renewable energy source means. Insulation includes materials made of fiberglass, rock wool, cellulose, urea based foam, urethane, vermiculite, perlite, polystyrene, and extruded polystyrene foam.

(2) The original use of the item begins with the taxpayer.

(3) The item can reasonably be expected to remain in operation at least 3 years.

(4) The item meets the applicable performance and quality standards prescribed in § 1.44C-4 (if any) that are in effect at the time the taxpayer acquires the item.

The term "insulation" shall not include items whose primary purpose is not insulation (e.g., whose function is primarily structural, decorative, or safety-related). For example, carpeting, drapes (including linings), shades, wood paneling, fireplace screens (including those made of glass), new or replacement walls (except for qualifying insulation therein) and exterior siding do not qualify although they may have been designed in part to have an insulating effect.

(d) Other energy-conserving components. The term "other energy-conserving component" means any item (other than insulation) that satisfies all of the following conditions:

(1) The original use of the item begins with the taxpayer.

(2) The item can reasonably be expected to remain in operation for at least 3 years.

(3) The item meets the applicable performance and quality standards prescribed in § 1.44C-4 (if any) that are in effect at the time of the taxpayer's acquisition of the item.

(4) The item is one of the following items:

(i) A furnace replacement burner. The term "furnace replacement burner" means a device (for oil and gas-fired furnaces or boilers) that is designed to achieve a reduction in the amount of fuel consumed as a result of increased combustion efficiency. The burner must replace an existing burner. It does not qualify if it is acquired as a component of, or for use in, a new furnace or boiler.

(ii) A device for modifying flue openings. The term "device for modifying flue openings" means an automatically operated damper that—

(A) Is designed for installation in the flue, between the barometric damper or draft hood and the chimney, of a furnace; and

(B) Conserves energy by substantially reducing the flow of conditioned air through the chimney when the furnace is not in operation. Conditioned air is air that has been heated or cooled by conventional or renewable energy source means.

(iii) A furnace ignition system. The term "furnace ignition system" means an electrical or mechanical device, designed for installation in a gas-fired furnace or boiler that automatically ignites the gas burner. In order to qualify, the device must replace a gas pilot light. Furthermore, it does not qualify if it is acquired as a component of, or for use in, a new furnace or boiler.

(iv) A storm or thermal window or door. The terms "storm or thermal window" and "storm or thermal door" include the following:

(A)(1) A window placed outside or inside an ordinary or prime window, creating an insulating air space.

(2) A window with enhanced resistance to heat flow through the glazed area by multi-glazing.

(3) A window that consists of glass or other glazing materials that have exception heat-absorbing or heat-reflecting properties. For purposes of this subdivision (iv), the term "glazing material" does not include films and coatings applied on the surface of a window.

(B)(1) A second door, installed outside or inside a prime exterior door, creating an insulating air space.

(2) A door with enhanced resistance to heat flow through the glazed area by multi-glazing.

(3) A prime exterior door that has an R-value (a measurement of the ability of insulation to resist the flow of heat) of at least 2 throughout.

For purposes of this subdivision, "multi-glazing" is an arrangement in which two or more sheets of glazing material are affixed in a window or door frame to create one or more insulating air spaces. Multi-glazing can be achieved by installing a preassembled, sealed insulating glass unit or by affixing one or more additional sheets of glazing onto an existing window (or sash) or door. For purposes of this subdivision, a storm or thermal window or door does not include any film applied on or over the surface of a window or door.

(v) Automatic energy-saving setback thermostat. The term "automatic energy-saving setback thermostat" means a device that is designed to reduce energy consumption by regulating the demand on the heating or cooling system in which it is installed, and uses—

(A) A temperature control device for interior spaces incorporating more than one temperature control level, and

(B) A clock or other automatic mechanism for switching from one control level to another.

(vi) Caulking and weatherstripping. The term "caulking" means pliable materials used to fill small gaps at fixed joints on buildings to reduce the passage of air and moisture. Caulking includes, but is not limited to, materials commonly known as "sealants", "putty", and "glazing compounds". The term "weatherstripping" means narrow strips of material placed over or in movable joints of windows and doors to reduce the passage of air and moisture.

(vii) Energy usage display meter. The term "energy usage display meter" means a device the sole purpose of which is to display the cost (in money) of energy usage in the dwelling. It may show cost information for electricity usage, gas usage, oil usage, or any combination thereof. The device may measure energy usage of the whole dwelling, or individual appliances or systems on an instantaneous or cumulative basis.

(viii) Components specified by the Secretary. The Secretary (or his delegate) may, in his discretion, after consultation with the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (or their delegates), and any other appropriate Federal officers, specify by regulation other energy-conserving components for addition to the list of qualified items. See § 1.44C-6 for the procedures and criteria to be used in determining whether an item will be considered for addition to the list of qualified items by the Secretary. The term "other energy-conserving component" is limited to items in a category specifically listed in section 44C(c)(4)(A)(i) through (vii) or added by the Secretary.

(e) Renewable energy source property—(1) In general. The term "renewable energy source property" includes any solar energy property, wind energy property, geothermal energy property, or property referred to in subparagraph (2), which meets the following conditions:

(i) The original use of the property begins with the taxpayer.

(ii) The property can reasonably be expected to remain in operation for at least 5 years.

(iii) The property meets the applicable performance and quality standards prescribed in § 1.44C-4 (if any) that are in effect at the time of the taxpayer's acquisition of the property.

Renewable energy source property does not include heating and cooling systems which serve to supplement renewable energy source equipment in heating or cooling a dwelling unit, and which employ a form of energy (such as electricity, oil or gas) other than solar, wind, or geothermal energy (or other forms of renewable energy provided in subparagraph (2)). Thus, heat pumps or oil or gas furnaces, used in connection with renewable energy source property, are not eligible for the credit. In order to be eligible for the credit for renewable energy source property, the property (as well as labor costs properly allocable to on-site preparation, assembly or installation of equipment) must be clearly identifiable. See § 1.44C-3(l) for recordkeeping rules.

(2) Renewable energy source specified by the Secretary. In addition to solar, wind, and geothermal energy property, renewable energy source property includes property that transmits or uses another renewable energy source that the Secretary (or his delegate) specifies by regulations, after consultation with the Secretary of Energy and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (or their delegates), and any other appropriate Federal officers, to be of a kind that is appropriate for the purpose of heating or cooling the dwelling or providing hot water for use within the dwelling. For purposes of this section, references to the transmission or use of energy includes its collection and storage. See § 1.44C-6 for the procedures and criteria to be used in determining when another energy source will be considered for addition to the list of qualified renewable energy sources.

(f) Solar energy property—(1) In general. The term "solar energy property" means equipment and materials of a solar energy system as defined in this paragraph (and parts solely related to the functioning of such equipment) which, when installed in connection with a dwelling, transmits or uses solar energy to heat or cool the dwelling or to provide hot water for use within the dwelling. For this purpose, solar energy is energy derived directly from sunlight (solar radiation). Property which uses, as an energy source, fuel or energy which is indirectly derived from sunlight (solar radiation), such as fossil fuel or wood or heated underground water is not considered solar energy property. Materials and components of "passive solar systems" as well as "active solar systems", or a combination of both types of systems may qualify as solar energy property.

(2) Active solar system. An active solar system is based on the use of mechanically forced energy transfer, such as the use of fans or pumps to circulate solar generated energy, or thermal energy transfer, such as systems utilizing thermal siphon principles. Generally, this is accomplished through the use of equipment such as collectors (to absorb sunlight and create hot liquids or air), storage tanks (to store hot liquids), rockbeds (to store hot air), thermostats (to activate pumps or fans which circulate the hot liquids or air), and heat exchangers (to utilize hot liquids or air to heat air or water).

(3) Passive solar system. A passive solar system is based on the use of conductive, convective, or radiant energy transfer. In order to qualify as a passive solar system, a solar system used for heating purposes must contain all of the following: a solar collection area, an absorber, a storage mass, a heat distribution method, and heat regulation devices. The term "solar collection area" means an expanse of transparent or translucent material, such as glass which is positioned in such a manner that the rays of the sun directly strike an absorber. The term "absorber" means a surface, such as a floor, that is exposed to the rays of the sun admitted through the solar collection area, which converts solar radiation into heat, and then transfers the heat to a storage mass. The term "storage mass" means material, such as masonry, that receives and holds heat from the absorber and later releases the heat to the interior of the dwelling. The storage mass must be of sufficient volume, depth, and thermal energy capacity to store and deliver adequate amounts of solar heat for the relative size of the dwelling. In addition, the storage mass must be located so that it is capable of distributing the stored heat directly to the habitable areas of the dwelling through a heat distribution method. The term "heat distribution method" means the release of radiant heating from the storage mass within the habitable areas of the dwelling, or convective heating from the storage mass through airflow paths provided by openings or by ducts in the storage mass, to habitable areas of the dwelling. The term "heat regulation devices" means shading or venting mechanisms (such as awnings or insulated drapes) to control the amount of solar heat admitted through the solar collection areas and nighttime insulation or its equivalent to control the amount of heat permitted to escape from the interior of the dwelling.

(4) Components with dual function. To the extent that a passive or active solar system utilizes portions of the structure of a residence, only the materials and components whose sole purpose is to transmit or use solar radiation (and labor costs associated with installing such materials and components) are included within the term "solar energy property". Accordingly, materials and components that serve a dual purpose e.g., they have a significant structural function or are structural components of the dwelling (and labor costs associated with installing such materials and components) are not included within the term "solar energy property". For example, solar collectors and roof ponds that form part of a roof (including additional structural components to support the roof), windows (including clerestories and skylights), and greenhouses do not qualify as solar energy property. In the case of a trombe wall (a south facing wall composed of a mass wall and exterior glazing), the mass wall (and labor costs associated with installing the mass wall) will not qualify. However, the exterior (non-window) glazing will qualify. Any shading, venting and heat distribution mechanisms or storage systems that do not have a dual function will also qualify.

(g) Wind energy property. The term "wind energy property" includes equipment (and parts solely related to the functioning of such equipment) which, when installed in connection with a dwelling, transmits or uses wind energy to produce energy in a useful form for personal residential purposes. Examples of equipment using wind energy to produce energy in a useful form are windmills, wind-driven generators, power conditioning and storage devices that use wind to generate electricity or mechanical forms of energy. Devices that use wind merely to ventilate do not qualify as wind energy property.

(h) Geothermal energy property. The term "geothermal energy property" includes equipment (and parts solely related to the functioning of such equipment) necessary to transmit or use energy from a geothermal deposit to heat or cool a dwelling or provide hot water for use within the dwelling. Equipment such as a pipe that serves both a geothermal function (by transmitting hot geothermal water within a dwelling) and a non-geothermal function (by transmitting hot water from a water heater within a dwelling) does not qualify as geothermal property. A geothermal deposit is a geothermal reservoir consisting of natural heat which is from an underground source and is stored in rocks or in an aqueous liquid or vapor (whether or not under pressure), having a temperature exceeding 50 degrees Celsius as measured at the wellhead or, in the case of a natural hot spring (where no well is drilled), at the intake to the distribution system.

§ 1.44C-3 Special rules.

(a) When expenditures are treated as made—(1) Timeliness of an expenditure for the energy credit. In general, for the purpose of determining whether an expenditure qualifies as being timely for the residential energy credit under section 44C (i.e., is made after April 19, 1977, and before January 1, 1986), the expenditure is treated as made when original installation of the item is completed. Thus, solely for that purpose, the time of payment or accrual is irrelevant.

(2) Special rule for renewable energy source expenditures in the case of construction or reconstruction of a dwelling. In the case of renewable energy source expenditures in connection with the construction or reconstruction of a dwelling that becomes the taxpayer's new principal residence, the expenditures are to be treated as made (for the purpose of determining the timeliness of an expenditure for the residential energy credit) when the taxpayer commences use of the dwelling as his or her principal residence following its construction or reconstruction. The term "reconstruction" means the replacement of most of a dwelling's major structural components such as floors, walls, and ceiling. When a taxpayer reoccupies a reconstructed dwelling that was the taxpayer's principal residence prior to reconstruction, a renewable energy source expenditure is considered made when the original installation of the renewable energy source property is completed.

(3) Taxable year in which credit is allowable. For the purpose of determining the taxable year in which the credit for an expenditure is allowable (once it has qualified as timely under subparagraph (1) or (2)), an expenditure is treated as made on the later of (i) the date on which it qualifies as timely, or (ii) the date on which it is paid or incurred by the taxpayer.

(b) Expenditures in 1977. No credit under section 44C shall be allowed for any taxable year beginning before 1978. However, the amount of any credit under section 44C for the taxpayer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1977, shall take into account qualified energy conservation expenditures and qualified renewable energy source expenditures made during the period beginning April 20, 1977, and ending on the last day of such first taxable year.

(c) Expenditures financed with Federal, etc., grants. Qualified expenditures financed with Federal, State or other grants shall be taken into account for purposes of computing the residential energy credit only if such amounts are taxable as gross income under section 61 (relating to the definition of gross income) and the regulations thereunder.

(d) Expenditures qualifying both as energy conservation expenditures and renewable source expenditures. In the case of an expenditure which meets both the definition of an energy conservation expenditure (as defined in § 1.44C-2(a)) and a renewable energy source expenditure (as defined in § 1.44C-2(b)), the taxpayer may claim either a credit under §1.44C-1(b) (relating to qualified energy conservation expenditures) or §1.44C-1(c) (relating to qualified renewable energy source expenditures) but may not claim both credits with respect to the same expenditure.

(e) Principal residence. For purposes of section 44C, the determination of whether a dwelling unit is the taxpayer's principal residence shall be made under principles similar to those applicable to section 1034 and the regulations thereunder (relating to sale or exchange of a principal residence) except that ownership of the dwelling unit is not required. In making this determination, the period for which a dwelling is treated as a taxpayer's principal residence includes the 30-day period ending on the first day on which the dwelling unit would (but for this sentence) be treated as being used as the taxpayer's principal residence under principles similar to those applicable to section 1034. Thus, installations that are completed within that 30-day period may be eligible for the credit although, in the absence of the 30-day rule, the date of habitation of the dwelling unit by the taxpayer would mark the beginning of the taxpayer's use of the unit as a principal residence.

(f) Construction substantially completed. Construction of a dwelling unit is substantially completed when construction has progressed to the point where the unit could be put to use as a personal residence, even though comparatively minor items remain to be finished or performed in order to conform to the plans or specifications of the completed building. For this purpose, construction includes reconstruction as defined in paragraph (a)(2). This rule may be illustrated by the following example:

Example. On January 1, 1979, A purchases a dwelling that is to become A's principal residence. The dwelling unit was originally constructed in 1950. A spends $50,000 to reconstruct the dwelling by replacing most of the dwelling's major structural components such as floors, walls and ceilings. Included in the cost is $3,000 attributable to energy-conserving components. Reconstruction is substantially completed on April 1, 1979, and A moves into the reconstructed residence on May 1, 1979. Since construction includes reconstruction, A's reconstructed residence is not considered substantially completed before April 20, 1977. Thus, amounts spent with respect to A's reconstructed residence for energy-conserving components do not qualify as energy conservation expenditures

(g) Residential use of property. To be eligible for the residential energy credit, expenditures must be made for personal residential purposes. If at last 80 percent of the use of a component or item of property is for personal residential purposes, the entire amount of the energy conservation expenditure or the renewable energy source expenditure is taken into account in computing the credit under this section. If less than 80 percent of the use of a component or item of property is for personal residential purposes, the amount of an expenditure taken into account is the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount of the expenditure as the amount of personal residential use of the component or item bears to its total use. For purposes of this paragraph, use of a component or an item of property with respect to a swimming pool is not a use for a personal residential purpose. The rules with respect to residential use of property are illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). In 1978 A makes an expenditure of $3,000 for the installation of storm windows of which 50 percent is on the portion of A's dwelling used as the principal family residence and 50 percent is on the portion of the dwelling used as an office. A has made no other energy conservation expenditures for the residence. The allowable energy conservation expenditure is $1,500 (50 percent of $3,000), the portion attributable to residential use. Therefore, the residential energy credit is $225 (the qualified conservation expenditure of 15 percent of $1,500).

Example (2). During 1979, B makes $10,000 of renewable energy source expenditures on solar energy property for B's principal residence. Approximately 60 percent of the use of the solar energy property will be for heating B's swimming pool; the other 40 percent will be for heating the dwelling unit. B had not previously made renewable energy source expenditures with respect to the residence. Since use for a swimming pool is not considered a residential use, less than 80 percent of the use of B's solar energy property is considered used for personal residential purposes. Therefore, only $4,000 (40 percent of $10,000), the proportionate part of B's expenditures representing personal residential use, is treated as a renewable energy source expenditure. B is allowed a $1,000 residential energy credit (30 percent of $2,000 plus 20 percent of $2,000) for 1979.

(h) Joint occupancy—(1) In general. If two or more individuals jointly occupied and used a dwelling unit as their principal residence during any portion of a calendar year—

(i) The amount of the credit allowable under section 44C by reason of energy conservation expenditures or by reason of renewable energy source expenditures shall be determined by treating all of the joint occupants as one taxpayer whose taxable year is such calendar year; and

(ii) The credit under section 44C allowable to each joint occupant for the taxable year with which or in which such calendar year ends shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount determined under paragraph (h)(1)(i) of this section as the amount of energy conservation expenditures or renewable energy source expenditures made by that occupant bears to the total amount of each type of such expenditures made by all joint occupants during such calendar year.

The provisions of this subparagraph may be illustrated by the following example:

Example. A, a calendar year taxpayer, and B, a June 1 fiscal year taxpayer, make energy conservation expenditures of $2,000 (A making expenditures of $500 and B making expenditures of $1,500) on their principal and jointly occupied residence in 1978. A and B have not previously made energy conservation expenditures with respect to this residence. Of the $300 credit (15 percent of $2,000), $75 will be allocated to A ($500/$2,000 × $300) and $225 to B ($1,500/$2,000 × $300). A will claim the allocable share of the credit on A's 1978 tax return and B will claim the allocable share of the credit on B's tax return for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1979.

(2) Minimum credit. The fact that one joint occupant may be unable to claim all or part of the credit under section 44C because of insufficient tax liability or because that occupant's allowable credit does not exceed the $10 minimum credit (as set forth in paragraph (d)(1) of § 1.44C-1) shall have no effect upon the computation of the amount of the allowable credits for the other joint occupants.

(3) Prior expenditures. Because joint occupants are treated as one taxpayer for purposes of determining the residential energy credit, the maximum amount of energy conservation expenditures or renewable energy source expenditures must be reduced by the total amount of such expenditures made in connection with the dwelling unit during prior calendar years in which any one of the residents of the unit during the current calendar year was a resident (whether made by the current resident or by an individual previously occupying the dwelling with the current resident). However, the preceding sentence shall not apply to prior expenditures no part of which was taken into account in computing the credits under section 44C for such years. Prior years' expenditures are not to be allocated among joint occupants to take into account the specific expenditures of each of the occupants in prior years.

(4) The rules of this paragraph may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). Assume A and B have together made prior years' energy conservation expenditures of $1,600 (A having made $1,200 of expenditures and B having made $400) on their principal and jointly occupied residence. In the current year, each makes energy conservation expenditures of $300 with respect to the same residence. The maximum qualified expenditure with respect to the residence is reduced by the $1,600 of prior expenditures made by A and B. Therefore, only $400 of the $600 current expenditures are eligible as energy conservation expenditures. The resulting residential energy credit is $60 (15 percent of $400) of which $30 apiece will be allocated to A and B ($300/$600 × $60). The fact that A had previously computed the credit in prior years with respect to $1,200 of the total $1,600 of expenditures is irrelevant to the apportionment of the credit in the current year.

Example (2). Spouses C and D make $10,000 of renewable energy source expenditures with respect to their principal residence, half of which is paid by each spouse. No prior renewable energy source expenditures have been taken into account with respect to that residence by either C or D. C and D file separate returns for the calendar year. Under the joint occupancy rule, the maximum allowable renewable energy source credit with respect to C and D's principal residence is $2,200 (30 percent of the first $2,000, and 20 percent of the next $8,000 of expenditures). Half of this amount, or $1,100, will be allowed to each spouse. If either spouse makes renewable energy source expenditures with respect to the same principal residence in future years, none of those expenditures would be qualified renewable energy source expenditures for which a credit can be claimed. That is, not more than $2,200 may be taken in the aggregate by C and D as a renewable energy source credit with respect to their principal residence.

Example (3). In 1978, E and F make energy conservation expenditures of $1,500 on their principal and jointly occupied residence. In 1979, E moves away and G becomes the other joint occupant of the residence. F and G make energy conservation expenditures of $1,000 in 1979. In 1980 F moves away and H moves in with G. G and H make energy conservation expenditures of $500. The maximum qualified expenditure made by F and G with respect to the residence is reduced by the $1,500 of prior expenditures made in 1978 by E and F. The maximum qualified expenditures made by G and H with respect to the residence is reduced only by the expenditures in prior years in connection with the residence during which either C or H was a joint occupant. Accordingly, the maximum qualified expenditures made by G and H with respect to the residence is reduced only by the $1,000 of prior expenditures made in 1979 by F and G.

(i) Condominiums and cooperative housing corporations. An individual who is a tenant stockholder in a cooperative housing corporation (as defined in section 216) or who is a member of the condominium management association with respect to a condominium which he or she owns shall be treated as having made a proportionate share of the energy conservation expenditures or renewable energy source expenditures of such corporation or association. The cooperative stockholder's allocable share of the expenditures is to be the same as his or her proportionate share of the cooperative's total outstanding stock (including any stock held by the corporation). However, in the case where only certain cooperative stockholders are assessed for the expenditures made by the cooperative housing corporation, only those cooperative stockholders that are assessed shall be treated as having made a share of the expenditures of such corporation. In such case, the cooperative stockholder's share of the expenditures is the amount that the stockholder is assessed. The allocable share of a condominum management association member's energy conservation or renewable energy source expenditures is the amount that the member is assessed (or would be assessed in the case where expenditures are from general funds) by the association as a result of such expenditures. The residential energy credit for a qualified expenditure is allowable for the year in which the association or corporation has completed original installation of the item (or has paid or incurred the expenditure, if later). For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'condominium management association" means an organization meeting the requirements of section 528(c)(1) of the Code (other than subparagraph (E) of that section), with respect to a condominium project substantially all the units of which are used as residences.

(j) Joint ownership of renewable energy source property—(1) In general. Renewable energy source property includes property which is jointly owned by the taxpayer and another person (or persons). For example, the fact that a windmill, solar collector, or geothermal well and distribution system is owned by two or more individuals does not by itself preclude qualification as renewable energy property.

(2) Example. The application of this subparagraph may be illustrated by the following example:

Example. A, B, and C each has a separate principal residence. They agree to finance jointly the construction of a solar collector, each providing one-third of the costs and taking one-third of the output of the collector. Each will separately pay for the costs of connecting the solar collector with his or her principal residence. Provided the solar collector and connection equipment otherwise qualify as renewable energy source property, A, B, and C will each be considered to have made renewable energy source expenditures equal to one-third of the cost of the collector plus his or her separate connection costs. Such expenditures will be subject to the limitations and other rules separately applicable to A, B, and C with respect to each principal residence, such as those with respect to the $10 minimum (§ 1.44C-1(d)(1)), prior expenditures (§ 1.44C-1(d)(2)), residential use (paragraph (g) of this section), and joint occupancy (paragraph (h) of this section).

(k) Basis adjustments. If a credit is allowed under section 44C for any expenditure with respect to any property, the increase in the basis of that property which would (but for this paragraph) result from such expenditure shall be reduced by the amount of the credit allowed.

(l) Recordkeeping—(1) In general. No residential energy credit is allowable unless the taxpayer maintains the records described in paragraph (l)(2) of this section. The records shall be retained so long as the contents thereof may become material in the administration of any internal revenue law.

(2) Records. The taxpayer must maintain records that clearly identify the energy-conserving components and renewable energy source property with respect to which a residential energy credit is claimed, and substantiate their cost to the taxpayer, any labor costs properly allocable to them paid for by the taxpayer, and the method used for allocating such labor costs.

§ 1.44C-5 Certification procedures.

(a) Certification that an item meets the definition of an energy-conserving component or renewable energy source property. Upon the request of a manufacturer of an item pursuant to paragraph (b) of this section which is supported by proof that the item is entitled to be certified, the Assistant Commissioner (Technical) shall certify (or shall notify the manufacturer that the request is denied) that:

(1) The item meets the definition of insulation (see § 1.44C-2(c)(1)).

(2) The item meets the definition of an other energy-conserving component specified in section 44C(c)(4) (see § 1.44C-2(d)(4)).

(3) The item meets the definition of solar energy property (see § 1.44C-2(f)), wind energy property (see § 1.44C-2(g)), or geothermal energy property (see § 1.44C-2(h)).

(4) The item meets the definition of a category of energy-conserving component that has been added to the list of approved items pursuant to paragraph (d)(4)(viii) of § 1.44C-2.

(5) The item meets the definition of renewable energy source property that transmits or uses a renewable energy source that has been added to the list of approved renewable energy sources pursuant to paragraph (e)(2) of § 1.44C-2.

(b) Procedure—(1) In general. A manufacturer of an item desiring to apply under paragraph (a) shall submit the application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: Assistant Commissioner (Technical), T:C:E, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224. Upon being advised by the National Office, orally or in writing, that an adverse decision is contemplated a manufacturer may request a conference. The conference must be held within 21 calendar days from the date of that advice. Procedures for requesting an extension of the 21-day period and notifying the manufacturer of the Service's decision on that request are the same as those applicable to conferences on ruling requests by taxpayers (see section 9.05 of Rev. Proc. 80-20 [page , this Bulletin]).

(2) Contents of application. The application shall include a description of the item (including appropriate design drawings and specifications) and an explanation of the purpose and function of the item. There shall accompany the application a declaration in the following form: "Under penalties of perjury, I declare that I have examined this application, including accompanying documents and, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the facts presented in support of the application are true, correct, and complete." The statement must be signed by the person or persons making the application.

(c) Effect of certification under paragraph (a). Certifications granted under paragraph (a)(1), (2), or (3) will be applied retroactively to April 20, 1977. However, certifications granted under paragraph (a)(4) or (5) will be applied retroactively only to the date the applicable energy-conserving component or renewable energy source was added by Treasury decision to the list of qualifying components or sources. Certification of an item under this section means that the applicable definitional requirement of § 1.44C-2 is considered satisfied in the case of any person claiming a residential energy credit with respect to such item. However, it does not relieve manufacturers of the need to establish that their items conform to performance and quality standards (if any) provided under § 1.44C-4 and that their items can reasonably be expected to remain in operation at least 3 years, in the case of insulation and other energy-conserving components, or at least 5 years, in the case of renewable energy source property.

§ 1.44C-6 Procedure and criteria for additions to the approved list of energy-conserving components or renewable energy sources.

Par. 3. Section 1.1016-5 is amended by adding a new paragraph (t) to read as follows:

§ 1.1016-5 Miscellaneous adjustments to basis.

* * * * *

(t) Section 44C credit. In the case of property with respect to which a credit has been allowed under section 44C (relating to residential energy credit), basis shall be adjusted as provided in paragraph (k) of § 1.44C-3.

Section 401.—Qualified Pension, Profit-Sharing, and Stock Bonus Plans

26 CFR 1.401-1: Qualified pension, profit-sharing and stock bonus plans.
(Also Sections 404, 1372; 1.404(a)-9, 1.1372-1.)

Profit-sharing; small business corporation; contributions from accumulated profits. The profit-sharing plan of an electing small business corporation does not fail to qualify merely because the plan document permits contributions to the plan from the corporation's accumulated profits as determined under generally accepted accounting principles, even though these amounts have previously been taxed to the shareholders under section 1373 of the Code. Such contributions are deductible under section 404(a)(3). Rev. Rul. 71-257 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-252

The purpose of this Revenue Ruling is to restate under current law Rev. Rul. 71-257, 1971-1 C.B. 131. The issues presented are (1) whether the profit-sharing plan of an electing small business corporation will fail to qualify because the plan document allows contributions to the plan to be made from accumulated profits (when there are no current profits) and (2) whether these contributions are deductible under section 404(a)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

A corporation that was an electing small business corporation as defined in section 1371(b) of the Code for each year of its existence established in its first year of existence a trusteed profit-sharing plan that meets the requirements of sections 401 and 1379. The plan provides that employer contributions will be made out of current or accumulated profits in an amount equal to 15 percent of the total compensation of participants.

As determined under its method of accounting, which reflected generally accepted accounting principles and practices, for each of its first two years the corporation had a profit. In each of the first two years, the employer made contributions to the profit-sharing trust in an amount equal to 15 percent of the participants' total compensation, which was less than the profit for each of the years. By the close of the second plan year, the corporation had $25,000 in accumulated profits under its method of accounting. This amount also represented income that had previously been taxed to the shareholders in accordance with section 1373 of the Code but not distributed to them. For its third year (without regard to any contribution to its profit-sharing trust) the corporation incurred a loss of $5,000. Nonetheless, the employer contributed $15,000 to the profit-sharing trust, representing 15 percent of the participants' total compensation.

Section 401(a) of the Code sets forth the basic requirements which the trust of a profit-sharing plan must meet in order to constitute a qualified trust. Section 1.401-1(b)(1)(ii) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a profit-sharing plan within the meaning of section 401 of the Code is a plan established and maintained by an employer to provide for the participation in the employer's profits by employees or their beneficiaries.

Section 404(a)(3) of the Code provides limits on the deductible contributions to a qualified profit-sharing trust.

Section 1.1372-1(c) of the regulations provides in part that, to the extent not inconsistent with subchapter S, other provisions of chapter 1 of the Code apply to an electing small business corporation in the same manner as they would if no election had been made.

Rev. Rul. 66-174, 1966-1 C.B. 81, holds that a profit-sharing plan will not fail to qualify under section 401 of the Code merely because it provides that contributions shall be made from current profits and accumulated earned surplus, as determined under generally accepted accounting principles and practices, without regard to whether the employer has current or accumulated earnings and profits for federal income tax purposes.

An electing small business corporation's profit-sharing plan likewise will not fail to qualify because it provides that contributions to the plan may be made from accumulated, as well as current, profits, as determined under generally accepted accounting principles and practices, even though the accumulated profits represent income that previously had been taxed to the shareholders under section 1373 of the Code and thus are not considered accumulated profits for federal income tax purposes.

Under its method of accounting, the electing small business corporation in this example had accumulated profits that exceeded the sum of the loss plus the contribution to the profit-sharing plan for the third year. Thus, this corporation had profits from which it could contribute to its profit-sharing plan for the third year, despite having incurred a loss in that year. Also, because the plan does not fail to qualify, the corporation is entitled to deduct its contributions to the extent provided by section 404(a)(3) of the Code.

Accordingly, the profit-sharing plan of the electing small business corporation does not fail to qualify because the plan document permits contributions to the plan to be made from current or accumulated profits, and the contributions to the plan are deductible as provided by section 404 (a)(3) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 71-257 is superseded because the position stated therein is restated under current law in this revenue ruling.

Section 404.—Deduction for Contributions of an Employer to an Employees' Trust or Annuity Plan and Compensation Under a Deferred-Payment Plan

26 CFR 1.404(a)-9: Contributions of an employer to an employees' profit-sharing or stock bonus trust that meets the requirements of section 401(a); application of section 404(a)(3)(A).

Whether the profit-sharing plan of an electing small business corporation will fail to qualify because the plan document allows contributions to the plan to be made from accumulated profits (when there are no current profits), and whether the contributions are deductible under section 404(a)(3) of the Code. See Rev. Rul. 80-252, page 14.

Section 415.—Limitations on Benefits and Contributions Under Qualified Plans

Benefits; limitations; actuarial adjustments; defined benefit plans. Adjustments made in accordance with reasonable assumptions, including those in accordance with the rules in Rev. Rul. 71-446, Rev. Rul. 76-47, or the proposed revenue ruling in Announcement 78-96, will meet the requirements for making actuarial adjustments required in applying the limitations on benefits under section 415(b)(1) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-253

This revenue ruling provides guidance for making the actuarial adjustments required in applying the limitations on benefits provided by section 415(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Section 415(b)(1) of the Code provides maximum dollar and percentage of compensation limitations on the benefits that may be provided by a defined benefit plan.

Section 415(b)(2) of the Code provides for actuarial equivalent adjustments in applying these limitations if benefits are in a form other than a straight life annuity or if plan benefits commence before age 55.

These actuarial equivalent adjustments must be made on the basis of reasonable actuarial assumptions.

For this purpose, adjustments made in accordance with the rules enunciated in Rev. Rul. 76-47, 1976-1 C.B. 109, or Rev. Rul. 71-446, 1971-2 C.B. 187, or the proposed revenue ruling published in Announcement 78-96, 1978-23 I.R.B. 42 are deemed to be made on the basis of reasonable actuarial assumptions.

Section 911.—Income Earned by Individuals in Certain Camps

26 CFR 5b.911-2: Qualifying earned income.

Earned income; royalties. Royalties paid to a writer by a publisher for the transfer of property rights of the writer in the writer's products are earned income under section 911(b) of the Code; Rev. Rul. 71-315 modified.

Rev. Rul. 80-254

Rev. Rul. 71-315, 1971-2 C.B. 271, holds that royalties paid to a writer by a publisher for the transfer of property rights of the writer in the writer's products are not earned income within the meaning of section 911(b) of the Internal Revenue Code. Rev. Rul. 71-315 also provides that amounts received by a writer under a personal service contract to write weekly articles for a newspaper and to write a book are earned income within the meaning of section 911(b).

In Tobey v. Commissioner, 60 T.C. 227 (1973), acq. 1979-1 C.B. 1, the United States Tax Court held that income from the sale of paintings created by the taxpayer is earned income under section 911 of the Code. See also Rev. Rul. 79-85, 1979-1 C.B. 246.

HOLDING

Because of the acquiescence in Tobey, the royalties paid to the writer in Rev. Rul. 71-315, by the publisher for the transfer of property rights of the writer in the writer's products are now considered to be earned income within the meaning of section 911(b) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 71-315 correctly holds that amounts received by the writer under a contract to write weekly articles for a newspaper and to write a book are earned income under section 911(b).

Rev. Rul. 71-315 is modified.

Section 1372.—Election by Small Business Corporation

26 CFR 1.1372-1: Election by small business corporation.

Whether the profit-sharing plan of an electing small business corporation will fail to qualify because the plan document allows contributions to the plan to be made from accumulated profits (when there are no current profits), and whether the contributions are deductible under section 404 (a)(3) of the Code. See Rev. Rul. 80-252, page 14.

Section 2036.—Transfers With Retained Life Estate

26 CFR 20.2036-1: Transfers with retained life estate.
(Also Section 2038; 20.2038-1.)

Trust; retained interest; after-born and after-adopted children. The provision in a trust instrument for the inclusion of all the settlor's after-born and after-adopted children as additional beneficiaries is not the retention of a power to change the beneficial interests of the trust within the meaning of sections 2036(a)(2) and 2038(a)(1) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-255

ISSUE

For purposes of sections 2036(a)(2) and 2038(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code, did a decedent-settlor retain a power to change the beneficial interests of a trust, requiring inclusion of the trust property in the settlor's gross estate, if under the trust instrument all of the decedent-settlor's after-born and after-adopted children were to become trust beneficiaries?

FACTS

In 1975, the decedent, D, created an irrevocable trust. The trust instrument provided that income was to be paid in equal shares to D's children. Principal was to be distributed twenty-one years after the creation of the trust in equal shares to each child (or the child's heirs). The trust instrument also provided that the children of D, born or adopted after the creation of the trust, were to be additional beneficiaries. When the trust was created, D had two children, A and B. In 1978, D's third child, C, was born.

D died in 1980. At that time, A, B, and C were beneficiaries of the trust.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2036(a)(2) of the Code provides that the value of the gross estate shall include the value of any interest in property transferred by a decedent if the decedent has retained for life the right, alone or in conjunction with any person, to designate the persons who shall possess or enjoy the property or the income therefrom.

Section 2038(a)(1) of the Code provides that the value of the gross estate shall include the value of all property transferred by the decedent if the enjoyment of the property was subject to change at his death through the exercise of a power by the decedent, alone or in conjunction with any person, to alter, amend, revoke, or terminate.

Rev. Rul. 72-307, 1972-1 C.B. 307, provided that the power to cancel a group-term life insurance policy solely terminating employment is not an incident of ownership, under section 20.2042-1(c) of the Estate Tax Regulations, in the policy. The revenue ruling at 308, stated:

> An insured's power to cancel his insurance coverage by terminating his employment is a collateral consequence of the power that every employee has to terminate his employment. The examples in section 20.2042-1(c) of the regulations, on the other hand, concern powers that directly affect the insurance policy or the payment of its proceeds without potentially costly related consequences. Where the power to cancel an insurance policy is exercisable only by terminating employment, it is not deemed to be an incident of ownership in the policy.

Accordingly, the revenue ruling held that the value of the proceeds of the group insurance was not includible in the decedent's gross estate under section 2042 of the Code. In Estate of Whitworth, T.C.M. 1963-41, the Tax Court concluded that Congress did not intend to include the ability to terminate one's employment, thereby revoking a spouse's rights to pension benefits, as a power to revoke within the meaning of section 2038.

In Estate of Tully v. United States, 528 F. 2d 1401 (Ct. Cl. 1976), the decedent-employee entered into an employment contract whereby the employer promised to pay death benefits to the decedent's widow. The court held that the decedent did not have a power to revoke under section 2038(a)(1) of the Code, even though the decedent could have divorced the spouse, thereby eliminating the spouse's possible status as widow. The court said: "In reality, a man might divorce his wife, but to assume that he would fight through an entire divorce process merely to alter employee death benefits approaches the absurd."

Likewise, the act of bearing or adopting children is an act of independent significance, the incidental and collateral consequence of which is to add the child as beneficiary to the trust. Although D's act of bearing or adopting children will automatically result in adding the child as beneficiary to the trust, such result is merely a collateral consequence of the bearing or adopting children. Cf. Rev. Rul. 75-415, 1975-2 C.B. 374.

Thus, a trust provision automatically including the settlor's after-born and after-adopted children as beneficiaries is not equivalent to the settlor's retention of a power to designate or change beneficial interests within the meaning of sections 2036(a) and 2038 of the Code.

For the same reason, at the time of creation of the trust, D is not treated as having reserved a power to change beneficial interests under section 25.2511-2(c) of the Gift Tax Regulations as a result of providing in the trust instrument that D's after-born or after-adopted children are to be trust beneficiaries. Cf. Rev. Rul. 55-678, 1955-2 C.B. 389. Therefore, D's establishment of the trust was a completed gift, because D did not retain dominion and control over the transferred property.

HOLDING

D did not retain a power to change the beneficial interests of the trust, for purposes of sections 2036(a)(2) and 2038(a)(1) of the Code, notwithstanding that all of D's after-born and after-adopted children were to become beneficiaries. Therefore, the trust property is not includible in D's gross estate.

Section 4061.—Imposition of Tax [Motor Vehicles]

26 CFR 48.4061(a)-1: Imposition of tax; exclusion for light-duty trucks, etc.
(Also Sections 4216, 4217, 4221; 48.4216(b)-2, 48.4217-2, 48.4221-6.)

Truck sold after exempt lease. The tax imposed by section 4061(a) of the Code applies to a manufacturer's retail sale of a truck that when new had first been leased under an exempt lease. For such sales after 1978, the tax base is 90 percent of the actual selling price after taking into account the adjustments provided by section 4216(a). For pre-1979 sales, the tax base is the higher of 75 percent of the actual selling price or the manufacturer's cost of production adjusted by straight line depreciation and limited to actual sales price. Rev. Rul. 74-577 obsoleted.

Rev. Rul. 80-256

ISSUE

Does the manufacturers excise tax imposed by section 4061(a) of the Internal Revenue Code apply under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

A truck manufacturer, regularly engaged in selling its trucks at retail in arm's length transactions, leased a new truck to a school for six months to meet the school's temporary needs. The lease agreement contained no option to renew and no option to purchase. The lease payments to the manufacturer by the school were not subject to the manufacturers excise tax imposed by section 4061(a) of the Code by reason of the exemption provided by section 4221(a)(5). At the end of the six-month period the manufacturer sold the truck at retail and at arm's length.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4061(a) of the Code imposes a tax on the sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of certain enumerated articles, including automobile truck chassis and bodies, unless such articles are suitable for use with a vehicle having a gross vehicle weight of 10,000 pounds or less.

Section 4217(a) of the Code provides that, for purposes of the manufacturers excise taxes imposed under Chapter 32 (which includes section 4061), the lease of an article (including any renewal or any extension of a lease or any subsequent lease of such article) by the manufacturer, producer, or importer is considered to be a sale of such article. Section 4217(d)(2) provides rules for determining the amount of tax payable upon the sale of an article by the manufacturer where the manufacturer has previously leased such article under a taxable lease.

In this case the manufacturer leased the truck under an exempt lease and then sold it to a nonexempt purchaser. The fact that the exempt lease occurred prior to the sale does not remove the sale from the scope of section 4061(a)(1) of the Code. The language of section 4217(d) indicates that Congress did not intend that a lease of an article insulate a later sale of such article from manufacturers excise tax because that section provides rules for determining the amount of tax due upon a sale of an article following a taxable lease of such article. Thus, the manufacturer's sale in this case is subject to tax under section 4061(a)(1).

However, the amount of tax due on the sale of the article is not governed by section 4217(d)(2) of the Code because the rules stated therein apply only in the case of a sale following a taxable lease. Accordingly, the tax base is determinable under the general rule of section 4061(a). Since the sale is at retail, the constructive sale price provisions of section 4216(b)(1)(A), as amended by Pub. L. No. 95-458, section 1, 1978-2 C.B. 367, 368, are applicable.

Under section 4216(b)(1)(A) of the Code, as amended, where a manufacturer, producer, or importer of taxable truck bodies and chassis sells such articles at retail, the tax is to be computed on a constructive sale price that is a percentage of the actual selling price. This percentage is to be based on the highest price for which such articles are sold by manufacturers and producers in the ordinary course of trade, as determined by the Service. The manufacturer's cost is not a factor. This section, as amended, is effective with respect to sales on or after January 1, 1979.

Rev. Rul. 79-33, 1979-1 C.B. 356, effective with respect to sales on or after January 1, 1979, provides that where a manufacturer, producer, or importer of a taxable truck chassis or body, or truck-tractor, sells such articles at retail, the basis for computing manufacturers excise tax is 90 percent of the actual selling price after taking into account the adjustments provided by section 4216(a) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 74-577, 1974-2 C.B. 349, provides that the manufacturers excise tax applies to a manufacturer's retail sale of a bus that when new had been leased to an organization under an exempt lease, and the tax base is the higher of 75 percent of the actual selling price or the manufacturer's cost of producing the new vehicle adjusted by straight line depreciation and limited to the actual sales price. However, under section 4063(a)(6) of the Code, as amended by Pub. L. No. 95-618, section 231(a), 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 2) 1, 13, the manufacturers excise tax does not apply with respect to buses sold after November 9, 1978.

HOLDING

The tax imposed by section 4061(a)(1) of the Code applies to a manufacturer's retail sale of a truck that when new had first been leased to an organization under an exempt lease. With respect to sales on or after January 1, 1979, the tax base is 90 percent of the actual selling price after taking into account the adjustments provided by section 4216(a). No further adjustment under section 4216 is allowable. With respect to sales prior to January 1, 1979, the tax base is the higher of 75 percent of the actual selling price or the manufacturer's cost of producing the new vehicle adjusted by straight line depreciation and limited to actual sales price.

Notice 80-9

Notice—Merchant Marine and Fisheries Capital Construction Funds—Applicable Rates of Interest on Nonqualified Withdrawals

Under the authority in section 607 (h)(4) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, (46 U.S.C. 1101), as amended by section 21 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 1031) [Pub. L. 91-469, 1970-2 C.B. 372], we hereby determine and announce that the applicable rate of interest on the amount of additional tax attributable to any nonqualified withdrawals from a capital construction fund established under section 607 of the Act shall be 10.36 percent, with respect to nonqualified withdrawals made in the taxable year beginning in 1980.

The determination of the applicable rate of interest with respect to nonqualified withdrawals was computed according to the joint regulations issued under the Act (46 CFR Part 391 § 391.7(e)(2)(ii)) by multiplying 8 percent by the ratio which (a) the average yield on 5-year Treasury securities for the calendar year immediately preceding the beginning of such taxable year, bears to (b) the average yield on 5-year Treasury securities for the calendar year 1970. The applicable rate so determined was computed to the nearest one-hundredth of 1 percent.

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to set forth procedures necessary for a manufacturer to make application for "certification" that an item will be treated as insulation, an energy-conserving component, or renewable energy source property, under the provisions of section 44C of the Internal Revenue Code.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

Section 44C of the Code allows an individual a credit against federal income tax in an amount equal to the sum of the qualified energy conservation expenditures plus the qualified renewable energy source expenditures. Manufacturers of items may apply to the Secretary to certify that such items will be treated for purposes of the residential energy credit as insulation, other energy-conserving components, or renewable energy source property. Section 44C(c)(6)(A)(ii) provides that the Secretary shall by regulations establish a procedure for obtaining this certification. Such procedure is established in section 1.44C-5 of the Income Tax Regulations and is implemented in this revenue procedure.

SEC. 3. GENERAL PRACTICES AND DEFINITIONS

.01 This revenue procedure covers applications for "certification" that for purposes of the residential energy credit, an item will be treated as:

(a) insulation,

(b) other energy-conserving components, or

(c) renewable energy source property.

.02 A "certification" is a written statement given by the National Office of the Internal Revenue Service to a manufacturer of an item certifying that the item meets the definition of insulation, other energy-conserving components, or renewable energy source property as defined in section 1.44C-2 of the regulations.

.03 A "certification" means only that the item meets the applicable definitional requirement in the case of any person claiming a residential energy credit with respect to such an item. It does not mean that the Service certifies that the item meets any performance or quality standards (if any) in effect at the time, that the item will save energy or money, or that the Service assumes any warranty or liability for the item's performance.

.04 Certification is available only to the manufacturer of an item. Requests for certifications will not be accepted from wholesalers, distributors, jobbers, importers, retailers, trade, business, or industry associations, consumer groups, governmental agencies, or individual taxpayers who are not the manufacturers of the item.

.05 Nothing in this revenue procedure is to be construed as preventing a taxpayer from requesting a ruling on the eligibility of any item for the residential energy credit. Such requests for a ruling are to be made in accordance with the procedures of Rev. Proc. 80-20, 1980-26, I.R.B. 7.

.06 Applications for certification of an item that has been specified by the Secretary as an energy-conserving component pursuant to section 1.44C-2(d)(4)(viii) of the regulations or as a renewable energy source pursuant to section 1.44C-2(e)(2) may be made under this revenue procedure.

.07 A manufacturer may apply on the same application for one or several items to be certified as meeting the definitional requirement of one or more categories. For example, the item, or items meet the definition of (1) more than one type of energy-conserving component, (2) insulation, and (3) renewable energy source properties, or any combination of these three categories. However, no more than five items may be included in any one application.

.08 It is not necessary to apply for separate certification of similar items that differ only in model number, size, or other parameters that do not change the inherent nature of the item.

.09 Granting of a certification to one manufacturer of an item does not grant certification to a similar product made by another manufacturer.

.10 Lack of certification of an item does not in itself disqualify that item for the residential energy credit if it otherwise qualifies.

.11 The Service in making the decision whether an item meets the definitional requirement in order to be certified may consult with the Secretary of the Department of Energy, the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development or any other appropriate sources to obtain their views concerning the item in question.

.12 The definitional requirements of items qualifying for certification are found in the following sections of the regulations:

Insulation, section 1,44C-2(c) with the exception of subparagraphs (2), (3), and (4).

Energy-conserving components, section 1.44C-2(d)(4).

Solar energy property, section 1.44C-2(f).

Wind energy property, section 1.44C-2(g).

Geothermal energy property, section 1.44C-2(h).

.13 Certifications granted for items that are specified in section 44C of the Code as added by the Energy Tax Act of 1978, Pub. L. 95-618, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 2) 1, will be applied retroactively to April 20, 1977. However, certifications granted to energy-conserving components or renewable energy source property that were added in accordance with section 1.44C-6 of the regulations will be applied retroactively only to the date the applicable energy-conserving component or renewable energy source property was added by Treasury Decision 7717, page 5, this Bulletin, to the lists of qualifying energy-conserving components or renewable energy sources.

SEC. 4. INSTRUCTIONS TO THE MANUFACTURER

.01 It is necessary to submit only one copy of an application for certification unless the application requests certification for more than one item; if so, a duplicate copy is to be submitted for each item in excess of one.

.02 An application for certification and any factual information subsequently submitted must be accompanied by a declaration in the following form: "Under penalties of perjury, I declare that I have examined this application including accompanying documents, and to the best of my knowledge and belief, the facts presented in support of the application are true, correct, and complete." In the case of a noncorporate manufacturer, it must be signed by the person or persons on whose behalf the application is made. In the case of a corporate manufacturer, the person who signs must be an officer of the corporation who has personal knowledge of the facts.

.03 In cases in which application for certification is requested for more than one item, or one item is to be certified in more than one category, the Service generally will issue a single certification. However, the manufacturer may apply for a separate certification for each item or each category. Unless the Service determines that it is not feasible or not in the best interest of the Service to comply with the manufacturer's application in such cases, separate certifications will be issued.

.04 Each application for certification must contain a complete statement of all the facts concerning each item. These facts must include but are not limited to:

(1) an explanation of the purpose and function of the item;

(2) a complete description of the item including design drawings and material specifications necessary to demonstrate the purpose and functions of the item; and

(3) the manner in which the item is to be used for its intended purpose.

In addition, photographs, appropriate samples, or other information to demonstrate that the item meets the definition of the claimed category may be included. Original documents or other material that the manufacturer may want returned should not be submitted because they will become part of the Service file and will not be returned. Material facts furnished to the Service by telephone or orally at a conference must be promptly confirmed by letter to the Service accompanied by a declaration in the form described in section 4.02. This confirmation must be furnished within 21 calendar days to be considered part of the application. Procedures for requesting an extension of the 21-day period and notifying the manufacturer or the manufacturer's representative of the Service's decision are the same as those stated in section 9.05 of Rev. Proc. 80-20.

.05 The application for a certification should be addressed to the Internal Revenue Service, Assistant Commissioner (Technical), Attention T:C:E, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224.

.06 A manufacturer may obtain information regarding the status of an application by calling the person whose name and telephone number is shown on the acknowledgement of receipt of the application.

.07 A manufacturer who desires a conference in the event an adverse determination is proposed to its application for certification may indicate such desire in writing when filing the application or soon thereafter.

.08 Replies to applications for certification sent to manufacturers under section 44C of the Code will be made open to public inspection under the procedures in section 6110, the regulations thereunder, and the Statement of Procedural Rules. In order to assist the National Office in complying with the provisions of section 6110, the manufacturer must follow the provisions of section 9.09 of Rev. Proc. 80-20.

.09 If the application is signed by a representative of the manufacturer or if the representative is to appear before the Service in connection with the application, the provisions of Rev. Proc. 80-20, section 9.10, are to be followed.

.10 If the manufacturer has more than one representative see Rev. Proc. 80-20, section 9.11.

.11 Any application for a certification that does not comply with all the provisions of this revenue procedure will be handled in the manner provided in Rev. Proc. 80-20, section 9.13.

.12 The order in which the Service processes applications for certification and requests for expeditious handling is explained in section 9.15 of Rev. Proc. 80-20.

.13 If a dispute arises between the manufacturer and the Service over the Service's intention to disclose the determination in regard to an application for certification pursuant to section 6110(f) of the Code or notations of third party contacts pursuant to section 6110(d), such disputes will be handled according to sections 9.19 and 9.20 of Rev. Proc. 80-20.

SEC. 5. CONFERENCES IN THE NATIONAL OFFICE

If the National Office considers it to be helpful in reaching a decision or when an adverse decision to an application for certification is indicated and the manufacturer had requested a conference in such circumstances, the manufacturer will be notified by telephone, if possible. The conference must be held within 21 calendar days after such contact has been made. Procedures for requesting an extension of the 21-day period and notifying the manufacturer or the manufacturer's representative of the Service's decision are the same as those stated in section 9.05 of Rev. Proc. 80-20.

If such a conference is held the procedure for the conference will be handled as provided for in section 11 of Rev. Proc. 80-20.

SEC. 6. WITHDRAWAL OF REQUESTS

An application for a certification may be withdrawn at any time prior to the signing of the letter of reply. Even though an application is withdrawn, all correspondence and exhibits will be retained by the Service and will not be returned to the manufacturer. In appropriate cases, the Service may publish its determination in a revenue ruling or revenue procedure.

SEC. 7. AREAS NOT COVERED BY THIS REVENUE PROCEDURE

This revenue procedure covers application for certification only. Applications for additions to the list of other energy-conserving components or other forms of renewable energy property as provided in section 1.44C-6 of the regulations or additions to the list of specially defined energy property under section 48(1) of the Code may not be made under this revenue procedure.

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE

This revenue procedure is effective September 22, 1980, the date of publication in the Internal Revenue Bulletin.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

Credits for Making Renewable Energy Source Expenditures Increased

Announcement 80-119 [1]

Taxpayers may now get increased tax credits for making renewable energy source expenditures for their principal residences.

For tax years beginning in 1980, the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, Pub. L. 96-223, 1980-3 C.B. 2, increases the credit for such expenditures to 40 percent of the first $10,000 of such expenditures or a maximum of $4,000. Formerly, this credit was 30 percent of the first $2,000 and 20 percent of the next $8,000 or a maximum of $2,200.

Qualifying expenditures are those made for property that transmits or uses solar or wind energy or energy derived from geothermal deposits to heat, cool, or provide hot water or electricity for use within a residence. The Act added, for expenditures beginning in 1980, property providing electricity.

The 15 percent credit for energy conservation expenditures such as insulation, storm windows and doors, weather stripping, caulking, and certain furnace modifications is unchanged by the new legislation.

Further information on energy tax credits is contained in Publication 903, Energy Credits for Individuals. This publication is currently being revised to include the new provisions and will be available from local Service offices in January 1981.

Coordination of Vesting and Discrimination Rules for Employee Retirement Plans

Announcement 80-120 [2]

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Announcement.

SUMMARY: This document announces that the Internal Revenue Service has published a news release, IR-80-85, dated August 4, 1980, that provides examples of the coordination of vesting and discrimination rules for employee retirement plans that may be included in the final regulations for determining if a plan's vesting schedule discriminates in favor of certain types of employees.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: George H. Bradley of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224, Attention: CC:LR:T, 202-566-3486, not a toll-free call.

Announcement

Proposed regulations for Internal Revenue Code section 411(d)(1) were published in the Federal Register on April 9, 1980 (45 FR 24201). In response to comments received, modifications to the proposed regulations were published in the Federal Register on June 12, 1980, (45 FR 39869) with three examples showing how the facts and circumstances test for discriminatory vesting in the proposed regulations was to be applied.

At the July 10, 1980, public hearing on the modified proposed regulations several commenters asked the IRS to include the three examples in the final regulations and to provide additional examples as guidance. The Treasury Department has indicated that other examples will be publicized before the final regulations are adopted so that the public and members of Congress can make comments.

The three original examples, with modifications, and two new examples are attached to IR-80-85. All five examples may be included in the final regulations under 411(d)(1).

Written comments on the examples should be sent to: Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: CC:LR:T (EE-164-78), 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224.

EXAMPLES (IR 80-85)

The following five examples are being considered for inclusion in the final regulations under section 411(d)(1) of the Code.

Each of the first four examples illustrates a particular set of facts and circumstances under which a plan's vesting schedule is not considered discriminatory under section 411(d)(1)(B). Each of the four examples is to be applied independently. Thus, if a plan satisfies the reasonable cross section test illustrated in Example 2, the vesting schedule is not considered to be discriminatory even if the accrued benefit test illustrated in Example 1 is not satisfied.

Example 5 illustrates a set of facts and circumstances under which a plan's vesting schedule is considered discriminatory in the absence of other facts and circumstances.

Furthermore, each of the five examples applies whether the plan is a defined benefit or a defined contribution plan.

EXAMPLES

Example 1. A plan has the "10-year cliff" vesting schedule described in section 411(a)(2)(A). The total present value of the employer-derived accrued benefits for the officers (within the meaning of section 410(b)(1)(B)) and 5% or more shareholders (determined using the attribution rules of section 1563(e), without regard to section 1563(e)(3)(C)), is less than the total present value of the vested employer-derived accrued benefits (including more than a nominal amount of vested employer-derived accrued benefits for rank-and-file employees) of all other current employees covered by the plan. Because the vested employer-derived accrued benefits provided employees who are not officers or shareholders are at least equal to the total accrued employer-derived benefits provided officers and shareholders, the plan's vesting schedule is not considered to be discriminatory.

Example 2. A plan covers all of an employer's employees, except those employees described in section 410(b)(2)(A). The plan has the 10-year cliff vesting schedule described in section 411(a)(2)(A) for all covered employees. It is clear that the class of employees who have vested benefits under the plan, as compared with all employees, other than employees described in section 410(b)(2)(A), would satisfy the nondiscriminatory classification test of section 410(b)(1)(B) by covering a reasonable cross section. Because a reasonable cross section of all employees, excluding employees described in section 410(b)(2)(A), under the plan have vested benefits, the vesting schedule of the plan is considered to be nondiscriminatory. [Examples 3 and 4 also illustrate the reasonable cross section test.]

[1] Based on News Release IR-80-91, dated August 22, 1980.

[2] Filed by the Office of the Federal Register on August 6, 1980, and published in the issue of the Federal Register for August 7, 1980, 45 F.R. 52399. Examples published with New Release IR 80-85, dated August 4, 1980, are included.

Example 3. A noncontributory plan covering all employees, except those employees described in section 410(b)(2)(A), provides for vesting at a rate of 20 percent after completion of 2 years of service with an additional 10 percent for each year thereafter.

The following table shows, by compensation ranges, the number of vested participants currently employed (counting each partially vested participant as a partial participant) as compared to all employees, except those employees described in section 410(b)(2)(A).

Compensation Range	Vested Participants*	All Employees, Except Section 410(b)(2)(A) Employees
20,001-50,000	0	0
15,001-20,000	1	3
10,001-15,000	.7	3
Total	4.7	11

* For purposes of this test, each participant who is an officer or shareholder is deemed to be 100 percent vested whether or not application of the plan's vesting schedule results in a lesser percentage of vesting. A highly compensated employee (who is not an officer or shareholder) will be treated in the same manner as above only if it is probable that such an employee will become 100 percent vested.

 Officer or shareholder.

This group of vested participants would satisfy the nondiscriminatory classification test of section 410(b)(1)(B) by covering a reasonable cross section. Therefore, because a reasonable cross section of all employees, except those described in section 410(b)(2)(A), have vested benefits, the vesting schedule of the plan is not discriminatory.

Example 4. A noncontributory plan covering all employees, except those employees described in section 410(a)(1)(A) (younger than age 25, less than 1-year service) provides for vesting of 40 percent after 4 years of employment plus an additional 5 percent for each of the next 2 years of employment plus an additional 10 percent for each year thereafter (4/40 vesting).

The following table shows, by compensation ranges, the number of vested participants currently employed (counting each partially vested participant as a partial participant) as compared to all employees.

Compensation Range	Vested Participants*	All Employees Including Section 410(a)(1)(A) Employees
$40,001 and up	1	1
30,001-40,000	0	0
25,001-30,000	1	1
20,001-25,000	1	1
15,001-20,000	2.5	4
10,001-15,000	1	4
7,501-10,000	2.4	7
Total	9.9	25

* For purposes of this test, each participant who is an officer or shareholder is deemed to be 100 percent vested whether or not application of the plan's vesting schedule results in a lesser percentage of vesting. A highly compensated employee (who is not an officer or shareholder) will be treated in the same manner as above only if it is probable that such an employee will become 100 percent vested.

 Officer or shareholder.

This group of vested participants would satisfy the nondiscriminatory classification test of section 410(b)(1)(B) by covering a reasonable cross section. Therefore, because a reasonable cross section of all employees, including those described in section 410(a)(1)(A), have vested benefits, the vesting schedule of the plan is not discriminatory.

Example 5. A noncontributory plan covers, and has covered for all years, five employees and satisfies the minimum participation requirements of section 410. The plan provides for "4/40 vesting," as described in Example 4. After six years of operation only one employee, X, has any vested employer-derived benefits. No other employee, past or present, has received or is entitled to any vested employer-derived benefit under the plan. X is the sole shareholder of Company B. Absent a showing of other facts and circumstances, the vesting schedule of Plan B is discriminatory.

Foundation Status of Certain Organizations

The following organizations have failed to establish or have been unable to maintain their status as public charities or as operating foundations. Accordingly, grantors and contributors may not, after this date, rely on previous rulings or designations in the Cumulative List of Organizations (Publication 78), or on the presumption arising from the filing of notices under section 508(b) of the Code. This listing does not indicate that the organizations have lost their status as organizations described in section 501(c)(3), eligible to receive deductible contributions.

If an organization listed above submits information that warrants the renewal of its classification as a public charity or as a private operating foundation, the Internal Revenue Service will issue a ruling or determination letter with the revised classification as to foundation status. Grantors and contributors may thereafter rely upon such ruling or determination letter as provided in section 1.509(a)-7 of the Income Tax Regulations. It is not the practice of the Service to announce such revised classification of foundation status in the Internal Revenue Bulletin.

Form 709-A, United States Short Form Gift Tax Return

A new short form gift tax return for married donors who are required to file but owe no taxes because of gift splitting with their spouses will be available by January 1981 for gifts made in 1980.

Form 709-A, United States Short Form Gift Tax Return, may be used by married taxpayers whose gifts of cash or certain other property are not more than $6,000 during the calendar year to each third-party donee.

Under section 2513 of the Code, if a husband and wife consent, all gifts made by either to third parties during a calendar quarter may be considered as made one-half by each.

The new form is filed annually for all four quarters of the year, rather than quarterly as is the longer Form 709, and is due by April 15 following the calendar year in which gifts are made. Also, unlike the Form 709, the new short form does not require any computations.

Under 31 Code of Federal Regulations, Part 10, an attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary, in order to avoid the institution or conclusion of a proceeding for his disbarment or suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service, may offer his consent to suspension from such practice. This announcement will appear in the weekly Bulletin at the earliest practicable date after such action and will continue to appear in the weekly Bulletins for five successive weeks or for as many weeks as is practicable for each attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary so suspended and will later be consolidated and published in the Cumulative Bulletin.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Rev. Rul. 80-257, page 5.
Arbitrage bonds; proceeds invested by city pension fund. A city is required by state law to levy sufficient property taxes annually to provide the required funding for its firefighters' pension fund. As a result, the city expects to substantially reduce the amount of taxes that it will have to levy in future years to maintain the pension fund reserves. The bonds will be arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c)(2) of the Code.

Rev. Proc. 80-37, page 22.

The Service will not ordinarily issue advance rulings under section 351 of the Code on the tax effect of a transfer when part of the consideration received by the transferors consists of bonds, debentures, or any other evidences of indebtedness of the transferee and the term of the indebtedness is either less than ten years or a determination as to whether the indebtedness is properly classified as debt or equity is required in order to establish that the requirements of section 351 are met; Rev. Proc. 80-22 amplified.

Rev. Proc. 80-38, page 22.
Areas in which advanced rulings will not be issued; classification of aliens. Advance rulings or determination letters will not ordinarily be issued concerning the classification of alien individuals as resident or nonresident, under section 871 of the Code and the regulations thereunder, with respect to situations in which the determination is dependent on factual representations that cannot be confirmed until the close of the individual's affected taxable year(s); Rev. Proc. 80-22 amplified.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

EMPLOYEE PLANS

Rev. Rul. 80-258, page 6.
Distributions; employer's stock; net unrealized appreciation; taxability. A qualified profit-sharing plan provides for the purchase of the employer's stock from employer and employee contributions and reinvestment of dividends. Upon an employee's separation from service, the plan provides for a distribution of the employer's stock attributable to the employee's contributions and to a portion of the reinvested dividends. An explanation is provided of the taxability of the distribution of appreciated stock under the plan. Rev. Rul. 67-165 superseded.

EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS

Application for exemption; when exempt. An organization that is organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes and is not a private foundation applied for recognition of its exempt status six years after it was incorporated. During its first three taxable years the organization's gross receipts were less than $15,000. During the fourth year its gross receipts for that year and the preceding two taxable years were greater than $15,000. The organization is not exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code from the beginning of its fourth year until the date it filed the required notice. Consideration will be given in applying the Commissioner's discretionary authority under section 1.9100-1 of the regulations to extend the time for satisfying the notice requirement.

Rev. Proc. 80-39, page 22.
Private foundations; taxable expenditures; employer-related educational loans. Guidelines are provided for determining whether educational loans made by private foundations under employer-related loan programs are taxable expenditures under section 4945 of the Code.

T.D. 7715, page 16.
Amendments to the regulations under section 4942 of the Code relate to the use of blockage or similar factors in determining the value of a private foundation's noncharitable assets, consisting of listed securites, to determine the amount foundations must distribute annually for charitable purposes.

ESTATE TAXES

Rev. Rul. 80-260, page 8.
Administration expenses; claims against estate; rate of exchange. In computing the amount deductible under section 2053 of the Code, the rate of exchange to be used in determining the U.S. dollar value of administration expenses incurred in a foreign country is the rate in effect on the date the payment is made. The rate to be used in determining the value of foreign claims against the estate is the rate in effect on the date of death (or alternate valuation date), provided the claim is properly valued at that date. If post-death events must be considered in valuing the claim, the rate on the date of payment is used in determining the value of the claim.

T.D. 7713, page 10.
Amendments to the regulations under section 2601 of the Code implement the effective date provisions of the new tax on generation-skipping transfers that was added by the Tax Reform Act of 1976.

GIFT TAX

Rev. Rul. 80-261, page 9.

Section 103.—Interest on Certain Governmental Obligations

26 CFR 1.103-13: Arbitrage bonds.
(Also Section 61; 1.61-7.)

Arbitrage bonds; proceeds invested by city pension fund. A city is required by state law to levy sufficient property taxes annually to provide the required funding for its firefighters' pension fund. The city proposes to issue general obligation bonds and distribute the proceeds to the pension fund for investment in obligations producing yields materially higher than the yield on the city's bonds. As a result, the city expects to substantially reduce the amount of taxes that it will have to levy in future years to maintain the pension fund reserves. The bonds will be arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c)(2) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-257

ISSUE

Will bonds issued by city X be arbitrage bonds as a result of the investment of bond proceeds by the trustees of the city X firefighters' pension fund?

FACTS

X is a political subdivision of state Y. X proposes to issue general obligation bonds maturing serially over 25 years, and to distribute the bond proceeds to the pension fund.

The statute enacted by the state Y legislature establishing city pension funds provides that the fund is a body politic and corporate, and is separate and apart from X and state Y. Under the statute, the trustees of the pension fund include certain officers of the fire department of X, representatives of the active firefighters, and a representative of the retired firefighters. The statute provides that the trustees are considered to be officials of the body politic and corporate.

The state statute provides for payment of pensions from the fund to retired firefighters and certain surviving relatives in amounts determined on the basis of each firefighter's age, salary, and years of creditable service with the fire department, rather than on the basis of earnings on, or appreciation of, assets in the pension fund. No separate accounts are established with the pension fund for individual firefighters.

Under the state statute, liabilities of the pension fund are the obligations of X. Moreover, X is required to levy a tax annually on all taxable property located within its bounds in an amount sufficient (1) to cover current service costs (sometimes referred to as "normal costs") and (2) to provide for amortization of unfunded accrued liabilities in the fund over a 20-year period. Since the statute was enacted, X has made annual contributions from taxes in an amount necessary to meet these funding requirements. However, X anticipates that contribution of the bond proceeds to the fund will satisfy the entire unfunded accrued liability of the pension fund. This contribution will equal approximately 10 times the annual contribution required under the statute to amortize unfunded accrued liabilities.

Tax revenues generated under the state statute will be used to pay debt service on the bonds.

The state statute requires investment of pension funds in certain enumerated categories of investment, including bonds of the United States. X reasonably expects that the trustees will use the bond proceeds to acquire obligations not described in section 103(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code producing yields materially higher than the yield on X's bonds during the term of the bonds. X further expects that such investment of the bond proceeds will substantially reduce the amount of taxes X will have to levy in future years to maintain the pension fund reserves.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 103(a)(1) of the Code provides that gross income does not include interest on obligations of a state or a political subdivision of a state.

Section 103(c)(1) of the Code provides that, with certain exceptions, an arbitrage bond is not treated as an obligation described in section 103(a)(1).

Section 103(c)(2) of the Code provides that the term "arbitrage bond" means any obligation that is issued as part of an issue all or a major portion of the proceeds of which are reasonably expected to be used directly or indirectly (A) to acquire securities or obligations that may be reasonably expected at the time of issuance of such issue to produce a yield over the term of such issue that is materially higher than the yield on obligations of such issue, or (B) to replace funds that were used directly or indirectly to acquire securities or obligations described in (A).

Because the amount of benefits paid by the pension fund is determined according to the age, salary, and years of service of the firefighters, the trustees' success or failure in investing the pension funds will not affect the amount of pensions paid. However, the success or failure of the trustees' investments, including investment of bond proceeds, will directly affect the amount of taxes that X must levy in future years, since X will remain obligated under the state statute to levy taxes annually as needed to cover normal costs and to amortize any unfunded accrued liabilities of the fund. Thus, the determination whether X will raise or lower taxes in future years will be dependent upon the yield and obligations acquired by the trustees with bonds proceeds. Consequently, X anticipates a substantial direct benefit from investment of bond proceeds by the trustees.

Therefore, it is concluded that all of the bond proceeds are reasonably expected to be used to acquire securities that are reasonably expected to produce yields materially higher than the yield on X's bonds within the meaning of section 103(c)(2).

HOLDING

The bonds will be arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c)(2) of the Code. Therefore, interest on the bonds will not be excludable from gross incomes of the bondholders under section 103(a)(1).

Section 402.—Taxability of Beneficiary of Employees' Trust

26 CFR 1.402(a)-1: Taxability of beneficiary under a trust which meets the requirements of section 401(a).
(Also Section 72; 1.72-11.)

Distributions; employer's stock; net unrealized appreciation; taxability. A qualified profit-sharing plan provides for the purchase of the employer's stock from employer and employee contributions and reinvestment of dividends. Upon an employee's separation from service, the plan provides for a distribution of the employer's stock attributable to the employee's contributions and to a portion of the reinvested dividends. An explanation is provided of the taxability of the distribution of appreciated stock under the plan. Rev. Rul. 67-165 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-258

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate, under current law, Rev. Rul. 67-165, 1967-1 C.B. 89.

Rev. Rul. 67-165 discusses the taxability of distributions of stock of the employer corporation, pursuant to an exempt employees' profit-sharing plan, under the circumstances described below.

An employer corporation established a qualified profit-sharing plan under section 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code and contributed fifty cents out of profits for each dollar contributed to the trust by an employee-participant. The plan provided that all contributions were to be invested in common stock of the employer corporation. Dividends received on such stock were also invested in the corporation's common stock.

The interest of each employee in the trust was represented by units allocated to his or her account. Units credited to an employee's account as a result of his or her own contributions were known as member-units. Units credited to an employee's account as a result of the corporation's contributions were known as employer-units. Both member-units and employer-units included stock that was attributable to reinvested cash dividends received by the trust represented by units already credited to an employee's account. Therefore, any employee who withdrew his or her member-units withdrew some shares that were, and some that were not, attributable to the employee's own contributions.

Upon separation from the service of the employer, an employee could withdraw all of the member-units credited to the account. Employer-units were not subject to withdrawal at such time but, rather, had to be left in the employee's account until the employee attained age 65. All withdrawals were paid in full shares of the corporation's common stock, to the extent possible, with any balance being paid in cash.

Section 402(a)(1) of the Code provides that "the amount actually distributed or made available to any distributee" by an exempt employees' trust shall be taxable to him or her in the year in which so distributed or made available under section 72 (relating to annuities). Section 402(a)(1) excludes from the amount actually distributed or made available to any distributee the "net unrealized appreciation in securities of the employer corporation attributable to the amount contributed by the employee." Special tax treatment is accorded lump-sum distributions as defined in section 402(e)(4).

Thus, the net unrealized appreciation attributable to employee contributions will be excluded from the distributee's gross income. The net unrealized appreciation which is not attributable to employee contributions will be included in gross income except to the extent excluded by section 72(e)(1)(B) of the Code. That section provides that if any amount is not received as an annuity, then such amount shall be included in gross income but only to the extent that it (when added to amounts previously received which were excludable from gross income) exceeds the aggregate consideration paid.

In determining the amount of net unrealized appreciation that is attributable to the amount contributed by the employee for purposes of section 402(a)(1) of the Code, section 1.402(a)-1(b)(3)(ii) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the amount contributed by the employee for the purchase of securities shall be solely the portion of his or her actual contributions properly allocable to such securities and shall not include any part of the increment in the trust expended for such securities.

Section 1.402(a)-1(b)(2)(i) of the regulations provides that the amount of net unrealized appreciation in securities of the employer corporation which are distributed by the trust is the excess of the market value of such securities at the time of distribution over the cost or other basis of such securities to the trust. Section 1.402(a)1(b)(3)(iii) states that the amount of the net unrealized appreciation which is attributable to the employee's contribution is that proportion of the net unrealized appreciation which the employee's contributions allocable to such securities bear to the cost or other basis to the trust of the securities.

In applying section 1.402(a)-1(b)(3)(iii) of the regulations to a distribution of securities of the employer which were purchased partially with employee contributions and partially with increments in the trust, the amount of net unrealized appreciation attributable to the employee's contributions is the amount of appreciation which bears the same relationship to the total net unrealized appreciation in such securities as the part of the cost of such securities paid with the employee's contributions bears to the total cost of the securities.

The remainder of the fair market value of the securities distributed is includible in the distributee's gross income under section 72(e)(1)(B) of the Code to the extent it exceeds the employee's contributions as defined in section 72(f). The effect of this computation is to include in the gross income of the distributee the increments of the trust used to purchase the stock plus that portion of the net unrealized appreciation allocable thereto. Amounts thus included in gross income are to be considered part of the basis of the securities in the hands of the distributee for purposes of determining gain or loss on their subsequent disposition.

Under the facts presented, the employee may withdraw only his or her member-units upon separation from the service of the employer prior to age 65. Such withdrawal does not constitute a lump-sum distribution within the meaning of section 402(e)(4) of the Code.

Accordingly, the employee is entitled to exclude from gross income under section 402(a)(1) of the Code only that portion of the total net unrealized appreciation that is allocable to the part of the stock purchased with his or her own contributions. The remainder of the fair market value of the securities distributed is includible in the gross income of the distributee under section 72(e)(1)(B) to the extent it exceeds the employee's contributions as defined in section 72(f).

Rev. Rul. 67-165 is superseded because the position set forth therein is restated, under current law, in this revenue ruling.

Section 508.—Special Rules With Respect to Section 501(c)(3) Organizations

26 CFR 1.508-1: Notices.
(Also Section 1.9100-1.)

Application for exemption; when exempt. An organization that is organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes and is not a private foundation applied for recognition of its exempt status six years after it was incorporated. During its first three taxable years the organization's gross receipts were less than $15,000. During the fourth year its gross receipts for that year and the preceding two taxable years were greater than $15,000. The organization is not exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code from the beginning of its fourth year until the date it filed the required notice. Consideration will be given in applying the Commissioner's discretionary authority under section 1.9100-1 of the regulations to extend the time for satisfying the notice requirement.

Rev. Rul. 80-259

ISSUE

In the situation described below, what effect does the application of section 508(a) of the Internal Revenue Code have on the effective dates of exempt status of an organization otherwise described in section 501(c)(3)?

FACTS

The organization is organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes within the meaning of section 501(c)(3) of the Code, and is not a private foundation within the meaning of section 509(a). It was incorporated on January 1, 1973, and files returns on a calendar year basis. On March 1, 1979, it applied to the Internal Revenue Service for recognition of exempt status under section 501(c)(3). Its gross receipts during the years 1973 through 1979 were as follows:

Taxable Year Ending	Gross Receipts
1974	2,900
1975	400
1976	12,600
1977	76,400
1978	96,200
1979	142,400

LAW

Section 508(a) of the Code provides, with certain exceptions, that an organization organized after October 9, 1969, shall not be treated as an organization described in section 501(c)(3) unless it gives notice to the Secretary that it is applying for recognition of such status within the time prescribed by the regulations for giving such notice.

Section 508(c)(1)(B) of the Code provides that the provisions of section 508(a) shall not apply to any organization that is not a private foundation (as defined in section 509(a)) and the gross receipts of which in each taxable year are normally not more than $5,000.

Section 1.508-1(a)(2)(i) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the notice referred to in section 508(a) of the Code must be filed within 15 months from the end of the month in which an organization was organized. Such notice is filed by submitting a properly completed and executed Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption.

Section 1.508-1(a)(3)(ii) of the regulations provides that the gross receipts of an organization are normally not more than $5,000 if—

> (a) During the first taxable year of the organization the organization has received gross receipts of $7,500 or less;
> (b) During its first two taxable years the aggregate gross receipts received by the organization are $12,000 or less; and
> (c) In the case of an organization which has been in existence for at least three taxable years, the aggregate gross receipts received by the organization during the immediately preceding two taxable years plus the current year are $15,000 or less.

The regulations further provide that if an organization fails to meet the requirements of (a), (b), or (c), then the organization shall be required to file the required notice described in section 508(a) of the Code within 90 days after the end of the period described in (a), (b), or (c), in lieu of the period prescribed in section 1.508-1 (a)(2)(i). Thus, for example, if an organization meets the $7,500 requirement of (a) for its first taxable year, but fails to meet the $12,000 requirement of (b) for the period ending with its second taxable year, then the organization shall meet the notification requirement if it files such notification within 90 days after the close of its second taxable year. If an organization that has been in existence at least three taxable years meets the requirements of (a), (b), and (c) with respect to all prior taxable years, but fails to meet the requirements of (c) with respect to the current taxable year, the notification requirements shall not apply with respect to its prior years. In such a case, the organization shall not be treated as described in section 501(c)(3) for a period beginning with such current taxable year and ending when such notice is given under section 508(a)(2).

The organization's aggregate gross receipts during the taxable years ending in 1973, 1974, and 1975 were $6,900. Therefore, the organization was not required to file an application for recognition of exemption within 90 days after the end of its 1975 taxable year. Accordingly, the organization is exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, effective for the period beginning on January 1, 1973, and ending on December 31, 1975.

The organization's aggregate gross receipts during the taxable years ending in 1974, 1975, and 1976 were $15,900. Accordingly, the exception set forth in section 1.508-1(a)(3)(ii)(c) of the regulations does not apply, and the organization was required to file an application for recognition of exemption within 90 days after the end of its 1976 taxable year.

Due to the fact that the organization failed to file its application within the required time period, it is not exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code during the period beginning on January 1, 1976, and ending on February 28, 1979, because it did not satisfy the notification requirement of section 508(a). However, the organization is exempt under section 501(c)(3), effective as of March 1, 1979, the date on which the required notice was given.

HOLDING

The organization is not exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code during the period beginning on January 1, 1976, and ending on February 28, 1979, because it did not satisfy the notification requirement of section 508(a). However, the organization is exempt under section 501(c)(3) for the period beginning on January 1, 1973, and ending on December 31, 1975, and is also exempt effective as of March 1, 1979, the date on which the required notice was given.

In addition, the organization may qualify for exemption under section 501(c)(4) of the Code for the period it is not exempt under section 501(c)(3). See Rev. Rul. 80-108, 1980-16 I.R.B. 8, which holds that an organization that otherwise qualifies for exemption under both sections 501(c)(3) and 501(c)(4), but that did not file for recognition of exemption under section 501(c)(3) within 15 months from the end of the month in which it was organized as required by section 1.508-1(a)(2)(i) of the regulations, may be exempt under section 501(c)(4) from the date of its inception.

APPLICATION FOR EXTENSIONS OF THE TIME FOR FILING NOTICE UNDER SECTION 508(a)

The Service will give consideration to applying the Commissioner's discretionary authority under section 1.9100-1 of the regulations to extend the time for satisfying the notice requirement of section 508(a) of the Code.

Under section 1.9100-1 of the regulations the Commissioner has discretion, upon a showing of good cause by a taxpayer, to grant a reasonable extension of time fixed by the regulations for making an election or application for relief in respect of tax under subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code, provided:

(1) the time for making the election or application is not expressly prescribed by the statute;

(2) the request for the extension is filed with the Commissioner within a period of time the Commisioner considers reasonable under the circumstances; and

(3) it is shown to the Commissioner's satisfaction that granting the extension will not jeopardize the Government's interests.

Rev. Proc. 79-63, 1979-2 C.B. 578, sets forth information and representations that must be furnished by the taxpayer and some factors that will be taken into consideration in determining whether such extensions will be granted. Also, see section 3.02 of Rev. Proc. 80-24, 1980-26 I.R.B. 31, for the applicable procedures to be followed in making a request.

Section 871.—Tax on Nonresident Alien Individuals

26 CFR 1.871-1: Classification and manner of taxing alien individuals.

Whether advance rulings or determination letters will ordinarily be issued to classify aliens as resident or nonresident under section 871 of the Code and the regulations thereunder. See Rev. Proc. 80-38, page 22.

Section 2053.—Expenses, Indebtedness, and Taxes

26 CFR 20.2053-1: Deduction for expenses, indebtedness and taxes; in general.

Administration expenses; claims against estate; rate of exchange. In computing the amount deductible under section 2053 of the Code, the rate of exchange to be used in determining the U.S. dollar value of administration expenses incurred in a foreign country is the rate in effect on the date the payment is made. The rate to be used in determining the value of foreign claims against the estate is the rate in effect on the date of death (or alternate valuation date), provided the claim is properly valued at that date. If postdeath events must be considered in valuing the claim, the rate on the date of payment is used in determining the value of the claim.

Rev. Rul. 80-260

ISSUE

What is the proper foreign exchange rate to be used in determining the United States dollar value of administration expenses and claims incurred in a foreign country, for purposes of computing the amount deductible under section 2053 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The decedent D, a United States citizen, died on September 27, 1979. In administering D's estate, the executor incurred expenses in X country in connection with property D owned in X that was includible in D's gross estate. In addition, D had incurred debts in X that were payable by D's estate. The administration expenses and the debts were allowable deductions under section 2053(a)(2) and (a)(3) of the Code.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2053(a)(2) and (a)(3) of the Code provide deductions for administration expenses and claims against the estate.

With regard to administration expenses, section 20.2053-3(a) of the Estate Tax Regulations provides that only expenses actually incurred in the administration of the estate are deductible. See also sections 20.2053-3(b) and (c) of the regulations which provide the general rule that executor's commissions and attorney's fees are deductible as administration expenses in such amount ". . . as has actually been paid, ..." (Emphasis added.) Thus, the amount of the deduction allowable for administration expenses is based on the amount actually paid by the estate rather than on a date of death valuation of anticipated expenses.

Accordingly, the foreign exchange rate in effect at the time of payment should be used in determining the United States dollar amount of the expense and, therefore, the amount deductible under section 2053(a)(2) of the Code. See Rev. Rul. 75-439, 1975-2 C.B. 359, which holds that in computing the section 2014 credit for foreign death tax the rate of exchange in effect at the time each payment of foreign death tax is made is used to convert the foreign death taxes paid into United States dollars.

If an administration expense has not yet been paid at the time the return is filed, then an estimated United States dollar amount may be deducted provided the expense is ascertainable with reasonable certainty and will be paid. See section 20.2053-1(b)(3) of the regulations.

Generally, a claim against the estate that otherwise satisfies the requirements of section 2053(a)(3) of the Code is valued, for deduction purposes, as of the date of death. However, under appropriate circumstances, postdeath events are taken into consideration in valuing a claim otherwise deductible under section 2053(a)(3). See Commissioner v. Estate of Shively, 276 F.2d 372 (2d Cir. 1960), and Chesterton v. United States, 551 F.2d 278 (Ct. Cl. cert. denied, 434 U.S. 835 (1977)), both holding that the decedent's former spouse's claim for periodic support payments until death or remarriage was to be valued for purposes of section 2053(a)(3) based on the actual amounts paid, since the former spouse remarried shortly after the decedent's death.

Therefore, if the claim would properly be valued as of the date of death (or alternate valuation date), then the foreign exchange rate on that date must be used in determining the United States dollar value of the claim and, thus, the amount deductible under section 2053(a)(3) of the Code. However, if postdate events must be considered in valuing the claim for section 2053(a)(3) deduction purposes, then the exchange rate in effect on the date of the payment (or dates of payment in situations involving a series of payments) is used in determining the value of the claim.

HOLDING

1. The foreign exchange rate in effect on the date the payment is made is used, for purposes of section 2053(a)(2) of the Code, in determining the United States dollar value of foreign administration expenses.

2. The foreign exchange rate in effect on the date of death (or alternate valuation date), is used for purposes of section 2053(a)(3) of the Code, in determining the United States dollar value of foreign claims against the estate, provided the claim is properly valued on that date for purposes of section 2053(a)(3). The foreign exchange rate on the date of payment is used in determining the United States dollar value of the claim, if postdeath events must be considered in valuing the claim.

Section 2503.—Taxable Gifts

26 CFR 25.2503-3(a): Future interests in property.

Present v. future interest; right to share in trust corpus; exclusion. A gift of a right to demand and receive at least a pro rata portion of trust corpus conveyed to several donees is a gift of a present interest to the extent of each donee's pro rata portion, and the annual exclusion under section 2503 of the Code is allowable.

Rev. Rul. 80-261

ISSUE

Is a donor entitled to the annual exclusion, under section 2503(b) of the Internal Revenue Code, for a gift of a portion of trust corpus to a donee if an interest in the corpus was also conveyed by the donor, at the time of the gift, to other persons, under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

In 1976, G, the settlor, established a trust and transferred $13,000 to the trustee. Under the provisions of the trust instrument, A, B, C, D, and E each had the right to receive a total sum of $4,000 of trust corpus by submitting a written demand to the trustee. However, if there was insufficient corpus to satisfy all of the demands, then the corpus was to be distributed on a pro rata basis among those donees demanding corpus. If any donee received an amount greater than the pro rata share of the trust corpus, the donee would be required to immediately reimburse the trustee for the excess amount in the event the trust corpus was insufficient to satisfy demands made by other donees.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2503(b) of the Code provides an exclusion of the first $3,000 of gifts made to any person by the donor during the calendar year. This exclusion applies to all gifts other than gifts of future interests. The fact that the donee must first make a demand for the corpus does not make the donee's interest a future interest. If a donee is assured of receiving some minimum amount of trust corpus, then the section 2503(b) exclusion for a gift of a present interest is allowable for the amount that the donee will receive with certainty notwithstanding that the donee must first make a demand for the corpus.

In the present situation, since each donee's demand for corpus is assured of being satisfied on a pro rata basis to the extent of $2,600, each gift of corpus is a gift of a present interest in the amount of $2,600.

HOLDING

G is entitled to an annual exclusion for each donee in the amount of $2,600.

Section 2601.—Tax Imposed [Tax on Certain Generation-Skipping Transfers]

26 CFR 26.2601-1: Effective date.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On December 21, 1978, the Federal Register published proposed regulations implementing the new generation-skipping transfer tax (26 CFR Part 26) under Chapter 13 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (43 FR 59849). A public hearing was held on April 10, 1979. After consideration of all written and oral comments regarding the proposed regulations, final regulations are adopted by this Treasury decision.

PROVISIONS OF THIS REGULATION

Under Chapter 13, a tax is imposed on every generation-skipping transfer occurring after June 11, 1976. However, section 2006(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (P.L. 94-455, 90 Stat. 1879) [supra at 365] provides that certain trusts in existence on that date (or created under wills in existence on that date) are excluded by effective date and transition rules from the application of the generation-skipping transfer tax provisions. The Code further provides that a trust, which is otherwise excluded from the new tax, may become subject to the tax if additions to corpus are made after June 11, 1976.

The regulations provide guidelines for determining which trusts in existence on June 11, 1976, are excluded from Chapter 13 under the effective date rule; which trusts in existence on June 11, 1976, are excluded from Chapter 13 by the transition rule; and what effect additions or amendments to trusts occurring after June 11, 1976, will have.

ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATIONS

These regulations are needed in order to provide guidance to the public as well as to government employees responsible for the implementation of Chapter 13 of the Code. Considering both the direct and indirect effects of these regulations, it is believed that they satisfactorily implement section 2006(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [supra at 365], as amended by section 702(n)(1) of the Revenue Act of 1978 [supra at 169]. Evaluation of the effectiveness of the regulations after issuance will be based upon comments received from offices within the Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department, other government agencies, and the public.

Fifty-four comments were received in response to the proposed regulations. The comments focused principally on three areas of the proposal: the definition of the term "revocable", the characterization of accumulated income as an addition to the corpus of a trust, and the characterization of a codicil as an amendment to a will at the time of execution even though ambulatory until death. The Treasury Department agrees that in these areas, as well as others, modification of the proposed regulations is appropriate.

The regulation has been revised to follow the structure of the statute more closely. It now provides an effective date rule applicable to irrevocable trusts and a transition rule applicable to wills and revocable trusts where the testator/creator dies before January 1, 1982. Under the regulation a trust will be treated as a revocable trust only if the trust would have been included in a decedent's estate under section 2038 (without regard to powers relinquished during the prior 3-year period) if the decedent had died on June 11, 1976. Furthermore, the regulation provides that accumulated income will not be an addition to the corpus of a trust. Finally, a post June 11, 1976, codicil will not be considered a disqualifying amendment to a will if it does not ultimately result in a change to the will which creates or increases the amount of a generation-skipping transfer.

Five comments were received on the transition rule treatment of mental incompetence. The Department agrees that the proposal provided results not contemplated by the statute. Accordingly, it has been revised to provide that the transition rule will apply to individuals who were mentally incompetent on June 11, 1976, for a minimum of two years after competency has been regained.

The Department believes Congress intended transitional relief be denied where individuals, after consideration of the generation-skipping aspects of their existing estate plans, alter those plans in a manner that creates or increases the amount of a generation-skipping transfer. Several commentors stated, however, that the proposed transition rule treatment of amendments to wills and revocable trusts left a number of questions unanswered and did not grant sufficient relief. In response to these comments, the proposal has been clarified in several respects. First, the regulation makes it clear that amendments to any instrument falling within the transition rule (including trust equivalents) will result in loss of "grandfathering" for all generation-skipping transfers under that instrument. Second, the word "technical" has been deleted from subsection (e)(1)(ii) because it was confusing and redundant. Third, several examples have been added. Fourth, the "independent effect" concept (under which each amendment would be tested against the facts as they exist on the date of death) has been replaced by a "cumulative effect" rule. The regulation now provides that in testing whether an amendment results in the creation or increase in the amount of a generation-skipping transfer, the instruments that exist on the date of death (or any prior taxable distribution or termination) will be compared to the instruments that existed on June 11, 1976.

Several commentors felt that a republication of a will that was in existence on June 11, 1976, should be treated as a will in existence on that date, arguing that the "revival" concept recognized in the proposal is a technicality. After reconsideration, the Department believes it would be unwise to modify the proposed rule. The apparent intent of Congress was to provide transitional relief for those wills that would be effective were the testator to die on June 11, 1976. The rule as proposed requires that any instrument "in place" on that date, be probated, and, therefore, open to challenge. Treating a republication as the original instrument, would place the Internal Revenue Service in the impractical position of "proving" that the instrument being republished not only was a valid will but that it was the instrument that would have controlled the devolution of the testator's property had the testator died on June 11, 1976.

The proposed regulation provided that post June 11, 1976, additions to both irrevocable and revocable trusts would subject a proportionate amount of transfers from the trust to Chapter 13. Upon reconsideration the Treasury Department believes that the statute distinguishes between additions to trusts subject to the effective date rule and those subject to the transition rule. Thus, under the final regulation, an addition to the corpus of an irrevocable trust will result in a proportionate part of future distributions being subject to tax, while an addition to a revocable trust will result in future distributions being fully subject to tax. However, to alleviate potentially harsh results, the regulation provides that if all post June 11, 1976, additions to a revocable trust are set aside as a separate fund prior to January 1, 1982, only the separate fund will be subject to Chapter 13.

Other comments suggested that either tracing or segregation of assets should be allowed as an alternative to the proposed rule that generation-skipping transfers occurring subsequent to an addition to corpus of an irrevocable trust are proportionately "tainted"; i.e., subject to tax under Chapter 13, to the same extent that the value of the corpus represented added assets immediately after the additions. The Treasury Department continues to believe that a single approach provides the more equitable result in terms of both trust and tax administration.

A number of commentors stated that "additions" to the corpus of a trust should only occur where property is conveyed to the trust from an outside source. They argued that the "constructive addition" concept adopted in the proposal was not intended by Congress. After reconsideration, the Department feels the legislative history does not support the position of the commentors. The structure of the statute (including both an effective date rule and a transition rule) and the language in the Conference Committee Report (expressly providing that "grandfather" protection will not in all cases be applicable to an irrevocable trust subject to a "limited" power of appointment) clearly indicate a congressional intent to provide relief from the provisions of Chapter 13 only in those cases where the generation-skipping transfer could not be avoided. Thus, subject to the application of the transition rule, it is appropriate to subject property to the generation-skipping tax where an individual is, for gift and estate tax purposes, treated as owning the property. This result is accomplished by the "constructive addition" concept.

As a number of commentors noted, the generation-skipping tax is essentially complementary to the estate and gift taxes and burdensome legal and administrative questions may arise if traditional transfer tax concepts are not followed. The Department recognizes the validity of these concerns and has revised the regulation to provide that a constructive addition will be deemed to occur in those cases where the exercise, release or relapse of a power of appointment is subject to either the Federal estate or gift tax, with the further provision that if a nongeneral power is exercised in a manner that may result in an extension of the term of the trust more than 21 years beyond a life or lives in being at the original creation of the trust, there will be a constructive addition to the corpus of the trust. However, principally for purposes of administrative convenience, where a constructive addition occurs by reason of the exercise, release or lapse of a power which is in any part taxable under Chapter 11 or Chapter 12 the amount of the addition will be equal to the entire portion of the trust subject to the power. Rules to determine the grantor of such construction additions will be set forth in definitional regulations to be published shortly in proposed form.

Six commentors felt that the "pour-over" exception to the addition to corpus rule should be expanded beyond a "grandfathered" will or revocable trust. The regulation now provides that any "pour-over" involving two "grandfathered" instruments will not result in loss of relief under either the effective date or the transition rule.

The regulation also contains an example stating that the transition rule is inapplicable where the holder of a general power of appointment dies before January 1, 1982, but had no will in existence on June 11, 1976. The Department believes this rule is necessary to relieve the Internal Revenue Service from having to inquire whether a will was destroyed after June 11, 1976, to avoid adverse generation-skipping tax consequences.

Finally, several grammatical changes suggested by commentors were adopted.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Fred E. Grundeman of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of regulations

Accordingly, a new Part 26, Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax Regulations, is added to Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations, and the first regulations adopted thereunder are as follows:

Sec. 26.2601-1 Effective Date.

Authority. Sections 2622 and 7805, Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (90 Stat. 1887, 68A Stat. 917, 26 USC; 2622, 7805).

§ 26.2601-1 Effective Date.

(a) In general. Except as provided in paragraphs (b)(1) and (b)(2) of this section, the provisions of Chapter 13 of the Code apply to any generation-skipping transfer, as defined in section 2611(a), made after June 11, 1976. For purposes of this section, any reference to a trust includes a "trust equivalent" within the meaning of section 2611(d).

(b) Exceptions—(1) General rule. The provisions of Chapter 13 of the Code will not apply to any generation-skipping transfer—

(i) under a trust which was irrevocable on June 11, 1976, but only to the extent that the transfer is not made out of corpus added to the trust after that date (the effective date rule); or

(ii) under any other trust created before June 12, 1976, or established under a will executed before June 12, 1976, which becomes irrevocable by reason of the death of a decedent before January 1, 1982, provided that the document in existence on June 11, 1976, was not amended at any time after June 11, 1976, in any respect which results in the creation of, or an increase in the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer (the transition rule).

(2) Mental disability. If an individual on June 11, 1976, was under a mental disability to change the disposition of his or her property, the date in the transition rule of this section (and in every reference to the transition rule) by which a document must become irrevocable shall be the later of January 1, 1982, or the date which is two years after the date on which the individual first regains his or her competence to dispose of his or her property. For purposes of this provision, the term "mental disability" means mental incompetence, in fact, to execute the instrument governing the disposition of his property, whether or not there was an adjudication of incompetence.

(3) Examples. The provisions of paragraphs (b)(1) and (b)(2) may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). A, a resident of State X, had executed an irrevocable generation-skipping trust, but had not funded the trust as of June 11, 1976. On that date the trust was named irrevocable beneficiary of certain paid up life insurance policies on the life of A. Under the law of State X a trust is not considered a separate entity until it is funded. However, under the law of State X the combination of documents in existence on June 11, 1976, is considered as irrevocably disposing of the insurance proceeds, and is, therefore, an irrevocable trust equivalent for purposes of Chapter 13. Assuming that the trust is not funded (and that no further arrangements are made to add corpus to the trust or enhance the benefit payable under the policies) future generation-skipping transfers pursuant to the trust will not be subject to Chapter 13 by reason of the effective date rule.

Example (2). Assume the same facts as in example (1) except that under the law of State X the documents did not irrevocably determine the disposition of the insurance proceeds. Under these circumstances the combination of documents in existence on June 11, 1976, is a revocable trust equivalent. Assume further that after executing the documents but before June 12, 1976, A became mentally disabled and was incompetent to dispose of his property by will until his death on August 15, 1985, at which time the trust was funded with the insurance proceeds. Since the revocable trust equivalent was in existence on June 11, 1976, and the decedent was at that time mentally disabled, no generation-skipping transfers pursuant to the trust will be subject to tax under Chapter 13.

Example (3). Assume the same facts as in example (2) except that the decedent became mentally disabled after June 11, 1976. In this case, since A became mentally disabled after June 11, 1976, and survived beyond December 31, 1981, the transition rule is not applicable and all generation-skipping transfers pursuant to the trust will be subject to the provisions of Chapter 13.

(c) Irrevocable trusts—(1) In general. For purposes of this section, any trust in existence on June 11, 1976, will be considered an irrevocable trust except to the extent that on that date it was subject to a power that would have caused the value of the trust to be included in a decedent's gross estate for Federal estate tax purposes by reason of section 2038 (without regard to those powers relinquished during the prior 3-year period) if the decedent had died on that date. Thus, a trust will be considered subject to a power on June 11, 1976, even though the exercise of the power was subject to the precedent giving of notice, or even though the exercise could take effect only on the expiration of a stated period, whether or not on or before June 11, 1976, notice had been given or the power had been exercised. Moreover, a trust will not be considered subject to a power if the power is, by its terms, exercisable only on the occurrence of an event or contingency not subject to the possessor's control (other than the death of the possessor) and if the event or contingency had not in fact taken place on June 11, 1976.

(2) Examples. The provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of this section may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). On June 11, 1976, Y, the settlor of a trust that was otherwise irrevocable on June 11, 1976, had a testamentary power to add new beneficiaries to the trust. The testamentary power held by Y would have caused the trust to be included in Y's gross estate under section 2038 if Y had died on June 11, 1976. Therefore the trust is not an irrevocable trust for purposes of this section.

Example (2). On June 11, 1976, A, the wife of the settlor of a trust in existence on that date, had the right to withdraw 15% of the corpus in each calendar year. The trust had a value of $100,000 on June 11, 1976, and was otherwise irrevocable on that date. Because the power was not held by the settlor of the trust it is not a power described in section 2038 of the Code and the trust is considered irrevocable on June 11, 1976.

Example (3). In 1972, A created a trust retaining the right to expand the class of remaindermen to include any of A's afterborn grandchildren. On June 11, 1976, there were no grandchildren who were not named remaindermen of the trust. Since A's power on June 11, 1976, was dependent on afterborn grandchildren being in existence, a contingency that had not occurred, the trust is not considered subject to the power on June 11, 1976, and is an irrevocable trust for purposes of this section.

(d) Amendments to wills or revocable trusts.—(1) In general. For purposes of this section, an amendment to a will or revocable trust in existence on June 11, 1976, will not be considered to result in the creation of, or an increase in the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer, where the amendment is—

(i) Basically administrative or clarifying in nature and only incidentally increases the amount transferred, or

(ii) Designed to ensure that an existing bequest or transfer qualifies for the applicable marital, charitable or minor child (orphans) deduction for estate, gift, or generating-skipping tax purposes and only incidentally increases the amount transferred.

For purposes of determining whether a particular amendment to a will (or revocable trust) creates, or increases the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer, the effect of the instrument(s) in existence on June 11, 1976, will be measured against the effect of the instrument(s) in existence on the date of death of the decedent or on the date of any prior generation-skipping transfer. If the effect of an amendment cannot be immediately determined, it will be deemed to create, or increase the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer until a determination can be made.

(2) Wills and trusts in existence on June 11, 1976. For purposes of this section, a will or revocable trust will be considered in existence on June 11, 1976, if (i) the will or revocable trust was in existence on June 11, 1976, (ii) the will or revocable trust was revoked in its entirety by a new will or revocable trust and (iii) prior to the death of the testator or creator the new will or revocable trust is revoked in such a manner that, under local law, the document(s) in existence on June 11, 1976, (or a conformed copy thereof) again controls the passing of property at death.

(3) Examples. The provisions of paragraph (d)(1) and (2) of this section may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). An amendment changes the trustees of a revocable trust in existence on June 11, 1976. Although the amendment may have the effect of lowering administrative costs and thus increasing the corpus of the trust, it will be considered administrative in nature. Therefore, assuming that the generations to which the new trustees belong do not result in the creation of, or an increase in the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer, the amendment will not prevent transfers pursuant to the trust from qualifying under the transition rule.

Example (2). On September 1, 1976, A executes a codicil to a will in existence on June 11, 1976, removing one of the coexecutors named in the will. Although the codicil may have the effect of lowering administrative costs and thus increasing the corpus of a residuary trust, it will be considered administrative in nature and will not prevent generation-skipping transfers under the will from qualifying under the transition rule.

Example (3). A will, in existence on June 11, 1976, containing a formula marital deduction provision coming within the transition rule of section 2002(d)(1) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, is amended to allow the estate to continue to obtain the maximum allowable estate tax marital deduction. Such an amendment does not prevent transfers under the will from qualifying under the transition rule even if the amendment incidentally produces an estate tax savings that increases the amount passing to a residuary generation-skipping trust.

Example (4). On September 1, 1976, A executes a codicil to his will that was in existence on June 11, 1976, revoking a bequest of $10,000 to B and causing that amount to be added to a residuary trust containing generation-skipping provisions. Such an amendment will be deemed to increase a generation-skipping transfer and will prevent transfers under the will from qualifying under the transition rule. If, however, B dies before A and the bequest would have lapsed under local law, the codicil will not be considered an amendment that increases a generation-skipping transfer.

Example (5). On June 11, 1976, a will provided that an amount equal to the maximum allowable marital deduction would pass to the testator's spouse. After June 11, 1976, the will is amended by codicil to provide that the amount passing to the surviving spouse will not exceed one-half of the adjusted gross estate, even though a larger deduction may be allowable by reason of certain generation-skipping transfers or the application of section 2056(c)(1)(A)(i). As the amendment merely removes a potential ambiguity created by changes in the law subsequent to execution of the will (and does not change the original distribution of the estate), it will be considered clarifying in nature and will not prevent transfers under the will from qualifying under the transition rule.

Example (6). On June 11, 1976, D's will provided that an amount equal to the maximum allowable marital deduction would pass to D's spouse with the residue of the estate passing to a testamentary generation-skipping trust. After June 11, 1976, the will is amended to provide that the marital share passing to D's spouse shall be the lesser of the maximum allowable marital deduction or that amount which will result in no estate tax liability for D's estate. The amendment is not considered clarifying in nature and may, therefore, prevent any generation-skipping transfers under the will from qualifying under the transition rule.

Example (7). On June 11, 1976, C's will provided for the creation of two generation-skipping trusts. On September 1, 1976, C executed a codicil to the will specifically increasing the amount to be used to fund one of the trusts. Since the codicil is an amendment to a will in existence on June 11, 1976, which, if effective, will increase the amount of a generation-skipping transfer, all transfers made pursuant to the will or either of the trusts created thereunder are precluded from qualifying under the transition rule.

Example (8). Assume that C in example (7) executed a second codicil deleting the increase to the fund. Because the provision increasing a generation-skipping transfer did not become effective it will not be considered an amendment to a will in existence on June 11, 1976.

Example (9). On June 11, 1976, C's revocable trust provided for certain generation-skipping transfers. Prior to his death on August 7, 1980, C amended his trust to provide that an amount, previously payable to C's child, be paid instead to charity under C's death. C's trust provided that any estate tax attributable to the trust should be paid by the trust. The effect of the charitable amendment was to decrease the estate tax attributable to the trust thereby increasing the corpus for subsequent generation-skipping transfers. Because the amendment does more than perfect an existing deductible transfer, the amendment is considered as increasing the amount of a generation-skipping transfer, and all transfers made pursuant to the trust are precluded from qualifying under the transition rule.

Example (10). Prior to June 11, 1976, S created a revocable trust providing that upon the death of S the income was to be paid to S's nephews A, B and C in equal shares for life, with one-third of the corpus to be distributed per stripes to each nephew's surviving issue upon the death of the nephew. A becomes disabled and S modifies the trust in 1978 to increase A's share of the income. Since the amendment cannot result in the creation of, or increase in the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer, transfers pursuant to the trust will not be subject to taxation under Chapter 13.

Example (11). Assume the same facts as in example (10) except that the amendment adds a fourth nephew, D, as an income beneficiary. Since the amendment does not create or increase the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer, transfers pursuant to the trust will not be subject to Chapter 13.

Example (12). Assume the same facts as in example (11) except that D's issue are to take a one-fourth share of the corpus per stirpes upon D's death. Because the distribution to be made upon D's death may involve a younger generation than would be involved if one-third shares were distributed under the original trust, the amendment will be considered an amendment that creates or increases a generation-skipping transfer until a determination can be made. Accordingly, any generation-skipping distribution of the trust corpus will be considered a taxable generation-skipping transfer until it is apparent that a younger generation has not been added to the trust. At that time a claim for refund may be filed with respect to any generation-skipping transfer tax that was paid within the period set out in section 6511.

Example (13). On June 15, 1976, C executed a new will revoking entirely a will in existence on June 11, 1976. The second will is considered a new will which was not in existence on June 11, 1976, and will not qualify under the transition rule even though each generation-skipping transfer under the new will is no greater than the transfer that would have occurred under the will in existence on June 11, 1976. If prior to C's death, C revokes the new will in such a manner that the document in existence on June 11, 1976, becomes subject to probate, the intervening instrument will not disqualify the original instrument for purposes of the transition rule. If C revokes the new will by a later will republishing the original will in its entirety the republication would not qualify transfers under the will under the transition rule unless local law would require the proof of the original document as C's will.

(e) Additions to corpus—(1) Irrevocable trusts. An addition made after June 11, 1976, to the corpus of a trust that was irrevocable on June 11, 1976, will subject a proportionate amount of the transfers from such a trust to the provisions of Chapter 13 of the Code. In such a case, the portion subject to Chapter 13 is a fraction of the trust's total value. The numerator of this fraction is the amount of the addition (valued as of the date the addition was made) and the denominator is the total value of the trust immediately after the addition. Where there is more than one addition to corpus after June 11, 1976, the portion of the trust attributable to all such additions will be a similar fraction. The numerator of this fraction is the sum of:

(i) The total value of the trust immediately before the latest addition, which, because of the prior addition, is subject to Chapter 13, and

(ii) The amount of the latest addition. The denominator of the fraction is the total value of the trust immediately after the latest addition.

(2) Revocable trusts. Except as provided in paragraph (e)(4) of this section, an addition made after June 11, 1976, but before the death of the settlor, to the corpus of a trust described in the transition rule will subject all subsequent generation-skipping transfers involving the trust to the provisions of Chapter 13 of the Code unless the corpus of the trust as it existed on June 11, 1976, is severed from the additions thereto. The corpus will be considered severed if, before January 1, 1982, the assets transferred to the trust after June 11, 1976 (together with all income and capital gains derived therefrom and after all losses, expenses, and distributions chargeable thereto) are permanently set aside as a separate fund so that the trust will be treated as two separate trusts under local law. Under these circumstances, all distributions from the separate fund will be subject to the provisions of Chapter 13. Additions made to the corpus of a trust described in the transition rule after it becomes irrevocable by reason of the death of the settlor will be treated as additions to an irrevocable trust.

(3) Constructive addition. Where any portion of the corpus of an irrevocable trust remains in the trust after the post June 11, 1976, release, exercise or lapse of a power of appointment over that portion of the corpus and the release, exercise or lapse is treated to any extent as a taxable transfer under either Chapter 11 (estate tax) or Chapter 12 (gift tax) of the Code, the value of the entire portion of the corpus involved in the release, exercise or lapse of the power (and not merely the taxable portion) will be treated as an addition to the trust for purposes of this chapter. Further, where any portion of the corpus of a trust is subject to a power of appointment, that portion will be considered an addition to the corpus of the trust, if, and to the extent that, after June 11, 1976, the power is exercised in a manner that may postpone or suspend the vesting, absolute ownership or power of alienation of an interest in property for a period, measured from the date of creation of the trust, extending beyond any life in being at the date of creation of the trust plus a period of 21 years. If a power is exercised by creating another power it will be deemed to be exercised to whatever extent the second power may be exercised. In the case of a decedent dying before January 1, 1982, the provisions of this paragraph (e)(3) will not be applicable to the exercise of a power pursuant to an instrument described in the transition rule.

(4) Exceptions. Any addition to a trust made pursuant to a trust meeting the requirements of the effective date rule or, in the case of a decedent dying before January 1, 1982, pursuant to an instrument described in the transition rule, will not be treated as an addition to corpus for purposes of this section. Where a decedent fails to exercise a general power of appointment in a will described in the transition rule, the corpus passing in default of the exercise will be considered as passing pursuant to the will. In addition, in the case of a decedent dying before January 1, 1982, any property transferred inter vivos to a trust will not be treated as an addition to corpus if the same property or money would have been added to the trust pursuant to a will or trust described in the transition rule, or passed in the same way, but for the inter vivos transfer. However, in any case where it cannot be determined at the time of an addition to corpus if the transition rule will apply, the property transferred will be deemed to be an addition to corpus until such time as a determination can be made.

(5) Appreciation and income. Except to the extent that the provisions of paragraph (e)(1) of this section allocate subsequent appreciation and accumulated income between original corpus and additions thereto, appreciation in the value of the corpus of a trust and undistributed income added thereto will not be considered an addition to the corpus of a trust.

(6) Relation to other sections. No provision of this section is to be construed as in any way modifying the rules to be applied in determining the identity of the grantor of a generation-skipping trust. For example, an addition to corpus occurring by reason of an exercise of a power of appointment will not cause the individual exercising the power to be considered a grantor of the trust unless the exercise is treated as a taxable transfer under Chapter 11 or Chapter 12 of the Code.

(7) Examples. The provisions of paragraphs (e)(1), (e)(2), (e)(3), and (e)(4) of this section may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). A, the settlor of a generation-skipping trust that was irrevocable on June 11, 1976, added $100,000 to the trust corpus on July 30, 1976. Immediately before the addition, the corpus of the trust had a value of $900,000. Transfers pursuant to the trust after the addition on July 30, 1976, will be subject to the generation-skipping transfer provisions to the extent of 10 percent (that is, $100,000/($900,000 + $100,000)).

Example (2). Assume the same facts as in example (1) except that on August 30, 1977, when the value of the trust corpus was $2,000,000, a constructive addition of one-half the corpus is made. Since 10% of the corpus is subject to Chapter 13 by reason of the first addition, then 10% of the constructive addition is attributable to corpus already subject to Chapter 13. Therefore, the new portion of the trust subject to Chapter 13 is 55%. The numerator of the fraction set out in paragraph (e)(1) of this section is $200,000 (10% of $2,000,000) plus $900,000 (90% of ½ of $2,000,000) or $1,100,000. The denominator is $2,000,000.

Example (3). Assume the same facts as in example (1) except that the trust was revocable rather than irrevocable on June 11, 1976, and the $100,000 addition would not have passed to the trust but for the inter vivos transfer. Transfers pursuant to the trust after the addition to corpus on June 30, 1976, will be fully subject to the generation-skipping transfer provisions unless, before January 1, 1982, the additional assets (together with all increments and after all distributions) are permanently set aside in such a manner that under local law the fund traceable to the "grandfathered" corpus will be treated as a separate trust.

Example (4). Assume the same facts as in example (1) except that A was also the settlor of a revocable trust in existence on June 11, 1976, and that A died on September 30, 1979, without amending, or adding corpus to, the revocable trust. Upon the death of A, the trustee of the revocable trust was directed to terminate the trust, distributing the assets to the trustee of the irrevocable trust. At the time of the "pour-over" on September 30, 1979, the corpus of each trust equaled $1,500,000. To determine the percentage of each generation-skipping transfer after September 30, 1979, that is subject to tax under Chapter 13, $150,000 (10% of $1,500,000, the value of the corpus of the irrevocable trust immediately before the "pour-over") is the numerator of the fraction described in paragraph (e)(1) of this section. No other amount is treated as an addition on that date under the transition rule. Therefore, assuming no other corpus is added to the trust, 5% (that is $150,000/($1,500,000 + $1,500,000) of any generation-skipping transfer pursuant to the trust after September 30, 1979, will be subject to Chapter 13.

Example (5). Assume the same facts as in example (4) except that the $1,500,000 added to the irrevocable trust did not come within the transition rule. In that case, to determine the percentage of subsequent distributions subject to tax, $1,650,000 (10% of the $1,500,000 corpus plus the $1,500,000 addition) is the numerator of the fraction described in paragraph (e)(1) of this section. Thereafter, assuming no other corpus is added to the trust, 55% (that is $1,650,000/($1,500,000 + $1,500,000)) of future generation-skipping transfers will be subject to Chapter 13.

Example (6). On June 11, 1976, B, the surviving child of the settlor of a trust that was irrevocable on that date, possessed a general power of appointment over the corpus. Under the terms of the trust (created in 1970) B's power lapsed upon attaining age 21, an event that occurred on September 23, 1979. Under section 2514, ninety-five percent (100%—5%) of the value of the corpus was treated as a gift by B for federal gift tax purposes. However, because the entire trust was subject to the power of appointment, 100% (that portion of the trust subject to the power) of all generation-skipping transfers pursuant to the trust occurring after September 23, 1979, will be subject to Chapter 13.

Example (7). H is the grantor of an irrevocable generation-skipping trust which was in existence on June 11, 1976. H's will, which was executed before June 11, 1976, and not amended thereafter, provides that upon his death the entire estate will pour-over into his trust. In 1980, H transfers $10,000 to the trust. If H dies after 1981, the transfer will be treated as an addition to corpus for purposes of any distribution made after the transfer to the trust in 1980. If H dies before 1982, the entire trust (as well as any distribution made by the trust prior to his death) will be excluded under paragraphs (b)(1)(i) and (e)(2) of this section from the generation-skipping transfer tax provisions, because the $10,000 would have been added to the trust under a will which would have qualified under paragraph (b)(1)(ii) of this section. In either case, for any generation-skipping transfers made after the transfer to the trust in 1980 but before H's death the $10,000 will be treated as an addition to corpus and a proportionate amount of such transfer will be subject to the generation-skipping transfer tax provisions. If H dies before January 1, 1982, the person liable for any previously paid generation-skipping transfer tax may file a claim for refund of such tax within the time limit set out in section 6511.

Example (8). A is the settlor of a generation-skipping trust which was in existence on June 11, 1976. Under the terms of the trust, A, on June 11, 1976, possessed the power to withdraw one-half of the corpus for A's personal use. The trust was irrevocable in all other respects. If A dies before January 1, 1982, the entire trust will be excluded from the generation-skipping transfer tax provisions. If A dies after December 31, 1981, one-half of all generation-skipping transfers pursuant to the trust will be subject to Chapter 13.

Example (9). Assume the same facts as in example (8) except that on July 30, 1980, while A is alive, a generation-skipping distribution is made from the trust. Because, on that date, it can not be determined whether the transition rule will be applicable, the revocable portion of the trust must be treated as a constructive addition to the irrevocable portion of the trust occurring on June 11, 1976. If A dies before January 1, 1982, the person liable for any previously paid generation-skipping transfer tax may file a claim for refund of such tax within the time limit set out in section 6511.

Example (10). H and W are the settlors of separate revocable generation-skipping trusts which were in existence on June 11, 1976, and not amended after that date. W dies in 1980 and under the provisions of her trust the corpus pours over into H's trust. If H dies before January 1, 1982, the entire trust is excluded under paragraph (b)(1) of this section from the operation of Chapter 13. If H dies after 1981, the entire trust is subject to the generation-skipping transfer tax provisions because H's trust did not qualify under the transition rule. The fact that W died before 1982 is irrelevant, because the corpus of her trust was added to a trust that never qualified under the transition rule.

Example (11). Assume the same facts as in example (10) except that upon the death of W in 1980 her trust continues as an irrevocable trust and that the corpus of H's trust is to be paid over upon his death to W's trust should he survive her. Again, if H dies before 1982, the entire trust falls within the provisions of paragraph (b)(1) of this section. However, if H dies after 1981, the "pour-over" is considered an addition to the corpus of a trust which falls within the transition rule, and a proportionate part of subsequent distributions and terminations will be subject to tax under Chapter 13.

Example (12). A, the spouse of the settlor of an irrevocable trust that was created in 1973, had, on June 11, 1976, a general power of appointment over the trust assets. The trust provides that should A fail to exercise the power the trustee is to continue the trust as a generation-skipping trust. On June 11, 1976, A had a will in existence under which A failed to exercise the power of appointment. If A dies before January 1, 1982, without having exercised the power in a manner which results in the creation of, or increase in the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer (or amended the will in a manner that results in the creation of, or increase in the amount of, a generation-skipping transfer) transfers pursuant to the trust will not be subject to Chapter 13 because the trust qualifies under the effective date rule, the will qualifies under the transition rule, and there is no constructive addition by reason of paragraph (e) (4) of this section.

Example (13). Assume the same facts as in example (12) except that on June 11, 1976, A did not have a will. Upon A's death, or upon the prior exercise or release of the power, the value of the entire trust will be treated as a constructive addition to the corpus and all subsequent distributions or terminations pursuant to the trust will be subject to Chapter 13. It is immaterial whether A's death occurs before January 1, 1982, since the transition rule is only applicable where a will was in existence on June 11, 1976.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER D, PART 53.—FOUNDATION EXCISE TAXES; TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING AFTER DECEMBER 31, 1975

Reduction in value for blockage or similar factors.

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to the use of blockage or similar factors in determining the value of private foundations' noncharitable assets consisting of listed securities issues for purposes of determining the amount foundations must distribute annually for charitable purposes. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1]. The regulations provide foundation managers with the guidance needed to comply with that Act and affect all foundations that hold listed securities issues for which reductions in value due to blockage or related factors are appropriate.

EFFECTIVE DATE: Taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On March 12, 1980, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Foundation Excise Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 53) under section 4942(e) (2) (B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (45 FR 15945). These amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 1303(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1715) [supra at 191]. No public hearing was requested or held. After consideration of the two comments received in response to the notice of proposed rulemaking, those amendments are adopted by this Treasury decision with the change de scribed below.

OLD LAW

Under section 4942(e) (2) as it e
isted prior to the Tax Reform Act
1976 and § 53.4942(a)-2(c) (4) (
(b) of the regulations, estate tax va uation methods were to be used value noncharitable assets of priva foundations consisting of listed secur ties issues.

NEW LAW

Section 4942(e) (2) (B) establishe certain new, more explicit rules f valuing a private foundation's no charitable assets consisting of list securities issues. In determining t value of such securities for minimu charitable expenditures purposes, the fair market value (determined witho regard to any reduction in value) not to be reduced unless, and only the extent that, a private foundati establishes that as a result of a certa factor or combination of factors en merated in the statutory provision, t securities could not be liquidated wit in a reasonable period of time exce at a price less than such fair mark value. Any reduction in value is to made only for one or more of the reasons and must not in the aggrega exceed 10 percent of the fair mark value of the securities.

FINAL REGULATIONS

These amendments to the regul
tions explain that the new law appli only to assets that are securities issu described in § 53.4942(a)-2(c) (4) (
(a) (generally, securities issues f which quotations are readily availab referred to in this preamble as "list securities issues"). See § 53.4942(a)
(c) (4) (i) (c).

They give as an example of "forced or distressed sale" under se tion 4942(e) (2) (B) (iii) of the Co
the situation where securities cann be sold on the open market witho first being registered under the Sec rities Act of 1933. See § 53.4942(a) registered shares of a listed securities issue to be valued first by reference to market quotations for the listed issue and then discounted under section 4942(e)(2)(B), if applicable, to reflect the fact that the shares are unregistered. Instead, as the comment is understood, the lack of registration should first be taken into account in determining the "fair market value" of the shares before applying factors, such as blockage, listed in section 4942(e)(2)(B)(i), (ii), and (iii).

It is clear that enactment of section 4942(e)(2)(B) responded to congressional concerns that excessive discounts were being claimed in making valuations of listed securities issues. It is believed that the valuation mechanism contemplated in section 4942(e)(2)(B) must begin with undiscounted market quotations for the listed issue and then allows reductions in this beginning value to the extent, but only to the extent, permitted by section 4942(e)(2)(B)(i), (ii), or (iii) and subject to the overall discount limitation of 10 percent. Adoption of this commentator's suggestion would only continue opportunities for excessive discounts which Congress sought to prevent in enacting section 4942(e)(2)(B).

Further, the commentator's suggested formula would necessarily involve an initial calculation based solely upon lack of registration and completely ignore the size of the block of unregistered stock, the size of the block being a factor to take into account only later under section 4942(e)(2)(B)(i). It is seriously doubted that such a calculation reasonably could be made.

The regulations, as proposed, effectively provide that if a private foundation owns unlisted securities of a corporation (issuer) that owns assets comprising listed securities issues, those underlying listed securities issues are to be valued using market quotations or in accordance with the new rules, if applicable. The second commentator objected to this rule as contrary to the statute, which on its face applies to listed securities issues owned by the private foundation as opposed to an intermediate holding company. The commentator did, however, correctly suggest that the reason for this rule was to prevent a private foundation's avoiding section 4942(e)(2)(B) simply by incorporating its investment portfolio as a holding company. While the commentator had no objection to a regulatory rule which addressed this potential avoidance situation, it objected to application of the rule to cases where the private foundation held only a small minority interest in the unlisted holding company.

In response to this comment, the final regulations amending § 53.4942(a)-2(c)(iv)(a) provide that if a private foundation owns voting stock of an unlisted issuer and has, or together with disqualified persons or another private foundation has, effective control of the unlisted issuer within the meaning of § 53.4943-3(b)(3)(ii), then to the extent that the issuer's assets consist of listed securities issues, such assets are to be valued monthly on the basis of market quotations or in accordance with section 4942(e)(2)(B), if applicable, in determining the net worth of the issuer.

Finally, the final regulations revoke the obsolete version of section 4942 from the CFR and set forth the effective date of the new and old rules. See § 53.4942(a)-2(c)(4)(i)(b), new last two sentences.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these proposed regulations was David E. Dickinson of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to the regulations are hereby adopted:

Paragraph 1. Section 53.4942 is revoked.

Par. 2. Two sentences are added to the end of § 53.4942(a)-2(c)(4)(i)(b) to read as follows:

§ 53.4942(a)-2 Computation of undistributed income.

(c) Minimum investment return. * * *

(4) Valuation of assets—(i) Certain securities. * * *

(b) * * * This paragraph (c)(4)(i)(b) applies only for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1976. See section 4942(e)(2)(B) and paragraph (c)(4)(i)(c) of this section for special valuation rules that apply for subsequent taxable years.

* * * * *

Par. 3. Sections 53.4942(a)-2(c)(4)(i)(c) and 53.4942(a)-2(c)(4)(i)(d) are redesignated as §§ 53.4942(a)-2(c)(4)(i)(d) and 53.4942(a)-2(c)(4)(i)(e), respectively, and a new § 53.4942(a)-2(e)(4)(i)(c) is added to read as follows:

§ 53.4942(a)-2 Computation of undistributed income.

(c) Minimum investment return. * * *

(4) Valuation of assets—(i) Certain securities. * * *

(c) For purposes of this subdivision (i) and with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975, if the private foundation can show that the value of securities determined on the basis of market quotations as provided by subdivision (i)(a) does not reflect the fair market value thereof because—

(1) The securities constitute a block of securities so large in relation to the volume of actual sales on the existing market that it could not be liquidated in a reasonable time without depressing the market,

(2) The securities are securities in a closely held corporation and sales are few or of a sporadic nature, and/or

(3) The sale of the securities would result in a forced or distress sale because the securities could not be offered to the public for sale without first being registered under the Securities Act of 1933 or because of other factors, then the price at which the securities could be sold as such outside the usual market, as through an underwriter, may be a more accurate indication of value than market quotations. On the other hand, if the securities to be valued represent a controlling interest, either actual or effective, in a going business, the price at which other lots change hands may have little relation to the true value of the securities. No decrease in the fair market value of any given class of securities determined on the basis of market quotations as provided by subdivision (i) (a) shall be allowed except as authorized by this subdivision, and no such decrease shall in the aggregate exceed 10 percent of the fair market value of such class of securities so determined on the basis of market quotations and without regard to this subdivision.

* * * * *

Par. 4. Two sentences are inserted between the second and third sentences of § 53.4942(a)-2(c)(4)(iv)(a), as follows:

§ 53.4942(a)-2 Computation of undistributed income.

(c) Minimum investment return. * * *

(4) Valuation of assets—* * *

(iv) Other assets. * * *

(a) * * * If, however, a private foundation owns voting stock of an issuer of unlisted securities and has, or together with disqualified persons or another private foundation has, effective control of the issuer (within the meaning of § 53.4943-3(b)(3)(ii)), then to the extent that the issuer's assets consist of shares of listed securities issues, such assets shall be valued monthly on the basis of market quotations or in accordance with section 4942(e)(2)(B), if applicable. Thus, for example, if a private foundation and a disqualified person together own all of the unlisted voting stock of a holding company which in turn holds a portfolio of securities of issues which are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, in determining the net worth of the holding company, the underlying portfolio securities are to be valued monthly by reference to market quotations for their issues unless a decrease in such value is authorized in accordance with section 4942 (e)(2)(B). * * *

[39] Section 3. Definitions

Unless the context requires otherwise—

[40] (11) "Ocean thermal energy facility," or OTEC facility, means any facility which is standing or moored in or beyond the territorial sea of the United States and which is designed to use temperature differences in ocean water to produce electricity or another form of energy capable of being used directly to perform work, and includes any equipment installed on such facility to use such electricity or other form of energy to produce, process, refine, or manufacture a product, and any cable or pipeline used to deliver fresh water or such electricity or product to shore, and all other associated equipment and appurtenances of such facility, to the extent they are located seaward of the highwater mark. The Committee intends that the waters of the Atlantic, Pacific, and Arctic Oceans, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Great Lakes be considered as ocean waters for the purposes of this definition. The definition is intended to include all types of OTEC cycles. If an OTEC facility is built on land with warm and cold water pipes extending out into the ocean, the definition includes that portion of the warm and cold water pipes, and any other parts of the facility, located seaward of the highwater mark.

(12) "Ocean thermal energy conversion plantship", or OTEC plantship, means any vessel which is designed to use temperature differences in ocean water, while floating unmoored or moving through such water, to produce electricity or another form of energy capable of being used directly to perform work, and includes any equipment installed on such vessel to use such electricity or other form of energy to produce, process, refine, or manufacture a product, and any equipment used to transfer such product to other vessels for transportation to users, and all other associated equipment and appurtenances of such vessel. The Commitee intends that the waters of the Great Lakes and all Oceans, Gulfs, and other bodies of water at least part of which are included within the definition of "high seas" be considered as ocean waters for the purposes of this definition. The definition is intended to include all types of OTEC cycles, and all types of OTEC vessels, whether mobile or dynamically positioned.

[50] TITLE II—MARITIME FINANCING FOR OCEAN THERMAL ENERGY CONVERSION FACILITIES AND PLANTSHIPS

Section 201. Determinations under Merchant Marine Act, 1936

Subsection (a) states that for the purposes of section 607 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, any OTEC facility or plantship licensed under this Act, and any vessel providing shipping services to or from such an OTEC facility or plantship, is deemed to be a vessel operated [51] in the foreign commerce of the United States. This interpretation of section 607 will apply for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1981. The substantive effect of this statement in the bill is to clarify that OTEC facilities and plantships, and vessels serving them, are eligible to use the capital construction fund provisions of the 1936 Act.

[1] Public Law 96-320, page 19.

Subsection (b) states that for the purposes of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, any vessel documented under the laws of the United States and used in providing shipping service to or from an OTEC facility or plantship licensed under this Act shall be deemed to be used in, and used in an essential service in, the foreign commerce or foreign trade of the United States, as defined in section 905(a) of the 1936 Act. The substantive effect of this statement in the bill is to clarify that vessels serving OTEC facilities and plantships are eligible for the same financing and financial assistance programs (including construction differential subsidy and operating differential subsidy) which apply to vessels carrying cargo between United States and foreign ports under the provisions of the 1936 Act, if they meet the specific requirements for receipt of such assistance.

Section 203. OTEC Demonstration Fund

This section amends Title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to set up a special subfund within the Federal Ship Financing Fund to apply to mortgage obligation guarantees for pilot or demonstration OTEC facilities and plantships which would not satisfy the "economically sound" criterion which is required for the regular Title XI program by section 1104(d). Such pilot or demonstration projects would have to be approved or participated in by the Department of Energy, and the mortgage obligation guarantee could cover no more than 87½ percent of the amount of private capital invested in the project. The limit on all mortgage obligation guarantees for OTEC pilot and demonstration plants is set at $2 billion, and the special provisions of this section could be used for not more than 5 OTEC pilot or demonstration projects. The special subfund would not be set up, and the loan guarantees could not be committed, until October 1, [52] 1981. Bonds or other obligations guaranteed under this section will be subject to regular income tax treatment, and may not be tax exempt.

Rev. Proc. 80-39

Section 1. Purpose

.01 The purpose of this revenue procedure is to provide guidelines for determining whether educational loans made by a private foundation under an employer-related loan program are taxable expenditures under section 4945 of the Internal Revenue Code.

.02 Ruling requests seeking advance approval of loan procedures are to be submitted to the Assistant Commissioner (Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations), Internal Revenue Service, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224, Attention: E:EO:T, and must include the statements required by section 53.4945-4(d) of the Foundation Excise Tax Regulations.

Sec. 2. Background

.01 Rev. Rul. 77-434, 1977-2 C.B. 420, holds that educational loans made by a private foundation on an objective and nondiscriminatory basis, pursuant to a procedure approved in advance by the Secretary or the Secretary's delegate, are individual grants within the meaning of section 4945(g)(3) of the Code. Thus, the loans are not taxable expenditures.

.02 Section 53.4945-4(b) of the regulations provides that a private foundation's grants are made on an objective and nondiscriminatory basis if the foundation's loan program is consistent with its exempt status under section 501(c)(3) of the Code and the allowance of deductions under section 170 for contributions to the foundation.

.03 Educational loans made by a private foundation to employees of a particular company or to their children are made for a purpose inconsistent with the foundation's exempt status under section 501(c)(3) of the Code and the allowance for deductions under section 170 for contributions to the foundation if the loans serve the private interests of the employer, rather than serving charitable purposes. A long-term, low-interest educational loan provided by a private foundation is of substantial value to students who could not obtain them from any source other than the employer-related program. The Service will assume that employer-related educational loans are made on an objective and nondiscriminatory basis, within the meaning of section 4945(g), and thus are not taxable expenditures, if they meet the guidelines contained in Sec. 4 of this revenue procedure.

Sec. 3. Application of Guidelines

.01 The guidelines in Sec. 4 apply only to educational loans made on or after January 1, 1970, by a private foundation under an employer-related program to individuals who are employees, or the children of employees, of the employer to which the program relates. Rev. Proc. 76-47, 1976-2 C.B. 670, provides guidelines for determining whether a grant made by a private foundation under an employer-related grant program to an employee or to a child of an employee of the particular employer to which the program relates is a scholarship or fellowship grant under section 117 of the Code.

.02 An employer-related program is a program that treats some or all of the employees, or the children of some or all of the employees, of a particular employer as a group from which the recipients of some or all of the foundation's loans will be selected; limits the potential loan recipients for some or all of the foundation's loans to individuals who are employees, or the children of employees, of the particular employer; or otherwise gives such individuals a preference or priority over others in being selected as loan recipients.

.03 The guidelines assume that the other applicable requirements of section 53.4945-4 of the regulations concerning loans to individuals are met.

.04 These guidelines do not determine whether loans to disqualified persons are taxable expenditures under section 4945 of the Code or would subject the disqualified persons to the tax on acts of self-dealing under section 4941.

SEC. 4. GUIDELINES

.01 General rule.

If a private foundation's educational loan program satisfies the seven conditions set forth in Secs. 4.03 through 4.09 below, and meets the percentage test described in Sec. 4.10, the Service will assume such loans are not taxable expenditures.

.02 Facts and circumstances test.

1 If a private foundation's loan program satisfies the seven conditions set forth in Secs. 4.03 through 4.09, but does not meet the percentage test of Sec. 4.10, the Service will consider, as a substitute for the percentage test of Sec. 4.10, all the relevant facts and circumstances to determine whether the primary purpose of the program is to further the private interests of the employer, or whether the primary purpose is to educate recipients in their individual capacities. The availability of loans under the program to employees of their children must be controlled and limited by substantial nonemployment-related factors so that the preferential treatment derived from employment is not of any significance beyond initial qualification for the loan. Such qualification must not lead to any significant probability that employment will make loans available for a qualified employee or his or her children interested in applying for one.

2 Such relevant facts and circumstances include, but are not limited to: the history of the program (such as the source of the program's funding), the courses of study for which the loans are available, any eligibility requirements imposed by the program (other than employment of the applicants or their parents and the age and grade level prerequisites for the studies for which the loans are available), the publicity given the loan program, the degree of independence of the selection committee, the particular standards used for selection, the specific means used to determine whether those standards have been met, the precise nature of the employee limitation or preference, the number of loans available, the number of employees or their children who would be eligible for the loans, the percentage of eligible employees or their children applying for loans who normally (e.g., on an average basis) receive loans under the program, and whether and how many loans are awarded to individuals who do not qualify as employees or the children of employees.

The program must not be used by the employer, the private foundation, or the creator of the foundation, to recruit employees or to induce employees to continue their employment or otherwise follow a course of action sought by the employer.

.04 Selection committee.

1 Selection of loan recipients must be made by a committee consisting wholly of individuals totally independent (except for participation on this committee) and separate from the private foundation, the foundation's creator, and the relevant employer. An individual who is a former employee of either the foundation or the employer concerned will not be considered totally independent. Such committees preferably should consist of individuals knowledgeable in the educational field so that they have the background and knowledge to evaluate properly the potential of the applicants.

2 The forwarding of the selections by the independent selection committee to the employer or the private foundation for the sole purpose of verifying the eligibility requirements and selection criteria used by the committee in considering the candidates and in making its selection will not disqualify the program. Any public announcement of the awards, however, must be made by the selection committee or by the foundation.

3 Loans must be awarded in the order recommended by the selection committee. The number of loans to be awarded may be reduced but may not be increased from the number recommended by the selection committee. Only the committee may vary the amounts of the loans awarded.

.05 Eligibility requirements.

1 The program must impose identifiable minimum requirements for loan eligibility. Such requirements must be related to the purpose of the program and must limit the independent selection committee's consideration to those employees, or children of employees, who meet the minimum standards for admission to an educational institution (as defined in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) of the Code) for which the loans are available. No persons will be considered eligible if they are not reasonably expected to attend such an institution, even if they meet the minimum standards.

2 If an employee must have been employed for some minimum period by the employer to which the program relates to be eligible to receive a loan, or to make that employee's children eligible to receive a loan, the minimum period of employment may not exceed three years. Moreover, eligibility must not be related to any other employer-related factors, such as the employee's position, or duties.

.06 Objective basis of selection.

Selection of loan recipients must be based solely upon substantial objective standards that are completely unrelated to the employment of the recipients or their parents and to the employer's line of business. Acceptable standards include, but are not limited to: prior academic performance, performance on tests designed to measure ability and aptitude for higher education, recommendations from instructors or other individuals not related to the potential loan recipients, financial need, and conclusions drawn from personal interviews as to motivation and character.

.07 Employment.

1 A loan may not be terminated solely because the recipient or the recipient's parent subsequently terminates employment with the employer, regardless of the reason for the termination of employment.

2 If a loan is awarded for one academic year and the recipient must reapply for an additional loan or loans to continue studies in a subsequent year, the recipient may not be considered ineligible for a subsequent loan simply because that individual or the individual's parent is no longer employed by the relevant employer. The standards for additional loans must be based solely upon nonemployment-related factors such as need and maintenance of scholastic standards.

3 At the time the loan or additional loans are awarded, there must be no requirement, condition or suggestion, express or implied, that the recipient or the recipient's parent is expected to render future employment services for the foundation or the relevant employer, or be available for such future employment, even though such future employment is at the discretion of the foundation or the employer.

.08 Course of study.

The courses of study for which loans are available must not be limited to those that would be of particular benefit to the relevant employer or to the foundation. If the courses of study for which loans are available include one or more that would be of such particular benefit, a loan may not be conditioned on the recipient's choosing such a course of study; the recipient must have a free choice to use the loan in the pursuit of a course of study for which the loan is otherwise available that is not of particular benefit to the employer or to the foundation.

.09 Other objectives.

The terms of the loan and the courses of study for which loans are available must be consistent with a disinterested purpose of enabling the recipients to obtain an education in their individual capacities solely for their personal benefit and they must not include any commitments, understandings or obligations, conditional or unconditional, suggesting that the studies are undertaken by the recipients for the benefit of the relevant employer or the foundation, or have as their objective the accomplishment of any purpose of the employer or the foundation (even though consistent with its exempt status) other than enabling the recipients to obtain an education in their individual capacities and solely for their personal benefit.

.10 Percentage test.

1 In the case of a program that awards loans to children of employees of a particular employer, the program meets this percentage test if the number of children receiving loans under that program in any given year does not exceed 25 percent of the number of employees' children who (i) were eligible, (ii) were applicants for such grants, and (iii) were considered by the selection committee in selecting the recipients of loans in that year, or 10 percent of the number of employees' children who can be shown to be eligible for loans (whether or not they submitted an application) in that year.

2 In the case of a program that awards loans to employees of a particular employer, the program meets this percentage test if the number of employees receiving loans under that program in any year does not exceed 10 percent of the number of employees who (i) were eligible, (ii) were applicants for such grants, and (iii) were considered by the selection committee in selecting the recipients of grants in that year.

3 For the purpose of applying these percentage tests, an employee or child of an employee will be considered eligible only if the individual meets all of the eligibility requirements imposed by the program and such requirements satisfy the conditions of Sec. 4.05 of this revenue procedure. Renewals of loans awarded in prior years will not be considered in determining the number of loans awarded in the current year. Loans awarded to children of employees and those awarded to employees will be considered as having been awarded under separate programs for purposes of all of the applicable requirements of this revenue procedure whether or not the loans are awarded under separately administered programs.

4 If a private foundation's employer-related program encompasses educational loans and scholarship or fellowship grants to the same group of eligible employees or employees' children, the percentage tests in Sec. 4.10 of this revenue procedure apply to the total number of individuals receiving combined grants of scholarships, fellowships, and educational loans.

SEC. 5. RELIANCE ON PRE-SEPTEMBER 29, 1980, RULING LETTERS

.01 A private foundation that holds a ruling letter issued before September 29, 1980, approving its employer-related educational loan program under section 4945(g)(3) of the Code, may continue to rely on the ruling letter provided its loan program fully complies with Secs. 4.01-4.10 continuously from the date on which the ruling letter was issued. Upon written request, the Service will issue a current ruling letter affirming the qualification of the loan program under the relevant portions of this revenue procedure.

.02 Pursuant to the authority contained in section 7805(b) of the Code, where a private foundation holds a ruling letter issued before September 29, 1980, approving its employer-related educational loan program, and where its loan program does not fully comply with Secs. 4.01-4.10, the private foundation may rely on the ruling letter through March 31, 1981.

.03 Educational loan programs modified to conform with Secs. 4.01-4.10 should be submitted for advance approval under section 4945(g)(3) of the Code in accordance with section 53.4945-4 of the regulations.

Form 6199, Certification of Youth Participating in a Qualified Cooperative Education Program, has been revised to reflect a provision in the Technical Corrections Act of 1979, Pub. L. 96-222, 1980-20 I.R.B. 5, 13. This law allows an individual age 19 but not yet age 20 to qualify as a member of a "targeted group" for the targeted jobs credit allowed employers under section 44B of the Internal Revenue Code. The credit is available for wages paid (or incurred) after November 26, 1979, to youths enrolled in a qualified cooperative education program. Before the enactment of the law the credit was not available for wages paid to youths reaching age 19.

The July 1980 revision of Form 6199 reflects this change in the law and can be used by a school to certify a youth age 19. The revision is now available and should be used instead of the March 1979 version.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Rev. Rul. 80-263, page 17.

Return preparer; normal office practice; pattern of errors. A return preparer failed to list all income shown on a taxpayer's Forms 1099, incorrectly totaled itemized deductions, and used the wrong tax table. Even though the preparer's normal office practice was to review the taxpayer-provided information, check the return for completeness, and check the tax computation, there was a pattern of errors on the return, and the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code applies.

Return preparer; normal office practice; failure to report minimum tax liability. A return preparer who failed to report a minimum tax liability showed that normal office practice, when taken together with other factors, indicated that the minimum tax error would rarely occur and that normal office practice was followed in preparing the return. The preparer was not liable for the negligence penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code. Rev. Rul. 80-28 distinguished.

Return preparer; failure to report income deducted on related return. A return preparer who prepared both an individual's return and the return of the individual's wholly owned corporation deducted interest paid by the corporation to the individual on the corporate return, but did not report the interest as income on the individual's return. The negligence penalty does not apply to the preparer if the information provided by the corporation did not indicate who received the interest and the information provided by the individual did not indicate receipt of such payment. However, the penalty would apply if the information provided by the corporation indicated that the individual received the interest payment.

Return preparer; reliance on taxpayer's assurances; entertainment expenses. A return preparer who asks a taxpayer if entertainment expense substantiation that satisfies the requirements of section 274(d) of the Code exists and receives assurances that it does will not be subject to the negligence penalty under section 6694(a) as a result of the taxpayer's failure to substantiate the expenses in an audit. Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Prices: Domestic—$2.00 a single copy, $55.00 a year subscription; Foreign—$2.50 a single copy, $68.75 a year subscription.

Announcement Relating to Decisions of the Tax Court

It is the policy of the Internal Revenue Service to announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin at the earliest practicable date the determination of the Commissioner to acquiesce or not acquiesce in a decision of the Tax Court which disallows a deficiency in tax determined by the Commissioner to be due.

Notice that the Commissioner has acquiesced or nonacquiesced in a decision of the Tax Court relates only to the issue or issues decided adversely to the Government.

Actions of acquiescences in adverse decisions shall be relied on by Revenue officers and others concerned as conclusions of the Service only to the application of the law to the facts in the particular case. Caution should be exercised in extending the application of the decision to a similar case unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, and consideration should be given to the effect of new legislation, regulations, and rulings as well as subsequent court decisions and actions thereon.

Acquiescence in a decision means acceptance by the Service of the conclusion reached, and does not necessarily mean acceptance and approval of any or all of the reasons assigned by the Court for its conclusions.

No announcements are made in the Bulletin with respect to memorandum opinions of the Tax Court.

The announcements published in the weekly Internal Revenue Bulletins are consolidated semiannually and annually. The semiannual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for July and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the first half of the year and the annual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for the following January and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the last half of the year.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER A, PART 1—INCOME TAX; TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING AFTER DECEMBER 31, 1953, SUBCHAPTER D, PART 54—PENSION EXCISE TAXES

Individual retirement arrangements

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to individual retirement arrangements (IRA's—individual retirement accounts, individual retirement annuities or retirement bonds). Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 [Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1]. These regulations provide necessary guidance to the public for compliance with the law, and affect individuals who maintain IRA's and institutions which sponsor IRA's.

DATE: The regulations are generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1974.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On February 21, 1975, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under sections 219, 402, 403 and 408 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (40 F.R. 7661). A new part, containing regulations under Code sections 4973 and 4974 (26 CFR Part 54), was also proposed. A correction notice was published in the Federal Register on March 5, 1975 (40 F.R. 10187). A supplemental notice was published on November 19, 1975 (40 F.R. 53593). A notice which withdrew and reproposed part of the notice of February 21, 1975 was published in the Federal Register on March 23, 1979 (44 F.R. 17754). The amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 2002 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (88 Stat. 958) [supra, at 127]. These final regulations, in general, do not reflect changes and additions made to the tax law by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1520) [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], the Revenue Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 2763) [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], and the Act of October 14, 1978 (P.L. 95-458, 92 Stat. 1255) [1978-2 C.B. 367]. Thus, these final regulations do not deal with the extension of the period for making individual retirement plan contributions under sections 219(c)(3) and 220(c)(4), the deduction of excess contributions in a subsequent year for which there is an unused limitation under sections 219(c)(5) and 220(c)(6), the additional period to rectify certain excess contributions under section 408(d)(5), and the allowance of rollovers on a more frequent basis under section 408(d)(3)(B).

Due to numerous statutory changes made to sections 402 and 4973 since the publication of the first notice, proposed regulations under those sections have been withdrawn and will be reproposed at a later date.

SPECIAL EFFECTIVE DATE FOR ROLLOVERS

If an individual engages in a transaction described in section 408(d)(3)(A)(i) (relating to rollover contributions) on or before April 15, 1976, the first such transaction by the individual on or before April 15, 1976, will not be taken into account for purposes of applying the three year limitation rule of section 408(d)(3)(B) in effect for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1978.

TEMPORARY REGULATIONS SUPERSEDED

Section 11.408(a)(2)-1 of the Temporary Income Tax Regulations under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is superseded by § 1.408-2(b)(2).

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation was William D. Gibbs of the Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to the regulations are hereby adopted:

INCOME TAX REGULATIONS (26 CFR Part 1)

Paragraph 1. The folowing new sections are added immediately after § 1.218.0:

§ 1.219-1 Deduction for retirement savings.

(a) In general. Subject to the limitations and restrictions of paragraph (b) and the special rules of paragraph (c)(3) of this section, there shall be allowed a deduction under section 62 from gross income of amounts paid for the taxable year of an individual on behalf of such individual to an individual retirement account described in section 408(a), for an individual retirement annuity described in section 408(b), or for a retirement bond described in section 409. The deduction described in the preceding sentence shall be allowed only to the individual on whose behalf such individual retirement account, individual retirement annuity, or retirement bond is maintained. The first sentence of this paragraph shall apply only in the case of a contribution of cash. A contribution of property other than cash is not allowable as a deduction under this section. In the case of a retirement bond, a deduction will not be allowed if the bond is redeemed within 12 months of its issue date.

[1] This publication of the Treasury Decision contains the complete text of the amendments to the regulations. The instructions for modifying the notices of proposed rulemaking have been omitted.

(b) Limitations and restrictions—(1) Maximum deduction. The amount allowable as a deduction under section 219(a) to an individual for any taxable year cannot exceed an amount equal to 15 percent of the compensation includible in the gross income of the individual for such taxable year, or $1,500, whichever is less.

(2) Restrictions—(1) Individuals covered by certain other plans. No deduction is allowable under section 219(a) to an individual for the taxable year if for any part of such year—

(2) An annuity plan described in section 403(a),

(3) A qualified bond purchase plan described in section 405(a), or

(4) A retirement plan established for its employees by the United States, by a State or political subdivision thereof, or by an agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing, or

(B) Amounts were contributed by his employer for an annuity contract described in section 403(b) (whether or not the individual's rights in such contract are nonforfeitable).

(ii) Contributions after age 70½. No deduction is allowable under section 219(a) to an individual for the taxable year of the individual, if he has attained the age of 70½ before the close of such taxable year.

(iii) Rollover contributions. No deduction is allowable under section 219 for any taxable year of an individual with respect to a rollover contribution described in section 402(a)(5), 402(a)(7), 403(a)(4), 403(b)(8), 408(d)(3), or 409(b)(3)(C).

(3) Amounts contributed under endowment contracts. (i) For any taxable year, no deduction is allowable under section 219(a) for amounts paid under an endowment contract described in § 1.408-3(e) which is allocable under subdivision (ii) of this subparagraph to the cost of life insurance.

(ii) For any taxable year, the cost of current life insurance protection under an endowment contract described in paragraph (b)(3)(i) of this section is the product of the net premium cost, as determined by the Commissioner, and the excess, if any, of the death benefit payable under the contract during the policy year beginning in the taxable year over the cash value of the contract at the end of such policy year.

(iii) The provisions of this subparagraph may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). A, an individual who is otherwise entitled to the maximum deduction allowed under section 219, purchases, at age 20, an endowment contract described in § 1.408-3(e) which provides for the payment of an annuity of $100 per month, at age 65, with a minimum death benefit of $10,000, and an annual premium of $220. The cash value at the end of the first policy year is 0. The net premium cost, as determined by the Commissioner, for A's age is $1.61 per thousand dollars of life insurance protection. The cost of current life insurance protection is $16.10 ($1.61 × 10). A's maximum deduction under section 219 with respect to amounts paid under the endowment contract for the taxable year in which the first policy year begins is $203.90 ($220 − $16.10).

Example (2). Assume the same facts as in example (1), except that the cash value at the end of the second policy year is $200 and the net premium cost is $1.67 per thousand for A's age. The cost of current life insurance protection is $16.37 ($1.67 × 9.8). A's maximum deduction under section 219 with respect to amounts paid under the endowment contract for the taxable year in which the second policy year begins is $203.63 ($220 — $16.37).

(c) Definitions and special rules—(1) Compensation. For purposes of this section, the term "compensation" means wages, salaries, professional fees, or other amounts derived from or received for personal service actually rendered (including, but not limited to, commissions paid salesmen, compensation for services on the basis of a percentage of profits, commissions on insurance premiums, tips, and bonuses) and includes earned income, as defined in section 401(c)(2), but does not include amounts derived from or received as earnings or profits from property (including, but not limited to, interest and dividends) or amounts not includible in gross income.

(2) Active participant. For the definition of active participant, see § 1.219-2.

(3) Special rules. (i) The maximum deduction allowable under section 219(b)(1) is computed separately for each individual. Thus, if a husband and wife each has compensation of $10,000 for the taxable year and they are each otherwise eligible to contribute to an individual retirement account and they file a joint return, then the maximum amount allowable as a deduction under section 219 is $3,000, the sum of the individual maximums of $1,500. However, if, for example, the husband has compensation of $20,000, the wife has no compensation, each is otherwise eligible to contribute to an individual retirement account for the taxable year, and they file a joint return, the maximum amount allowable as a deduction under section 219 is $1,500.

(ii) Section 219 is to be applied without regard to any community property laws. Thus, if, for example, a husband and wife, who are otherwise eligible to contribute to an individual retirement account, live in a community property jurisdiction and the husband alone has compensation of $20,000 for the taxable year, then the maximum amount allowable as a deduction under section 219 is $1,500.

(4) Employer contributions. For purposes of this chapter, any amount paid by an employer to an individual retirement account or for an individual retirement annuity or retirement bond constitutes the payment of compensation to the employee (other than a self-employed individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) includible in his gross income, whether or not a deduction for such payment is allowable under section 219 to such employee after the application of section 219(b). Thus, an employer will be entitled to a deduction for compensation paid to an employee for amounts the employer contributes on the employee's behalf to an individual retirement account, for an individual retirement annuity, or for a retirement bond if such deduction is otherwise allowable under section 162.

§ 1.219-2 Definition of active participant.

(a) In general. This section defines the term "active participant" for individuals who participate in retirement plans described in section 219(b)(2). Any individual who is an active participant in such a plan is not allowed a deduction under section 219(a) for contributions to an individual retirement account.

(b) Defined benefit plans—(1) In general. Except as provided in subparagraphs (2), (3) and (4) of this paragraph, an individual is an active participant in the defined benefit plan if for any portion of the plan year ending with or within such individual's taxable year he is not excluded under the eligibility provisions of the plan. An individual is not an active participant in a particular taxable year merely because the individual meets the plan's eligibility requirements during a plan year beginning in that particular taxable year but ending in a later taxable year of the individual. However, for purposes of this section, an individual is deemed not to satisfy the eligibility provisions for a particular plan year if his compensation is less than the minimum amount of compensation needed under the plan to accrue a benefit. For example, assume a plan is integrated with Social Security and only those individuals whose compensation exceeds a certain amount accrue benefits under the plan. An individual whose compensation for the plan year ending with or within his taxable year is less than the amount necessary under the plan to accrue a benefit is not an active participant in such plan.

(2) Rules for plans maintained by more than one employer. In the case of a defined benefit plan described in section 413(a) and funded at least in part by service-related contributions, e.g., so many cents-per-hour, an individual is an active participant if an employer is contributing or is required to contribute to the plan an amount based on that individual's service taken into account for the plan year ending with or within the individual's taxable year. The general rule in paragraph (b)(1) of this section applies in the case of plans described in section 413(a) and funded only on some non-service-related unit, e.g., so many cents-per-ton of coal.

(3) Plans in which accruals for all participants have ceased. In the case of a defined benefit plan in which accruals for all participants have ceased, an individual in such a plan is not an active participant. However, any benefit that may vary with future compensation of an individual provides additional accruals. For example, a plan in which future benefit accruals have ceased, but the actual benefit depends upon final average compensation will not be considered as one in which accruals have ceased.

(4) No accruals after specified age. An individual in a defined benefit plan who accrues no additional benefits in a plan year ending with or within such individual's taxable year by reason of attaining a specified age is not an active participant by reason of his participation in that plan.

(c) Money purchase plan. An individual is an active participant in a money purchase plan if under the terms of the plan employer contributions must be allocated to the individual's account with respect to the plan year ending with or within the individual's taxable year. This rule applies even if an individual is not employed at any time during the individual's taxable year.

(d) Profit-sharing and stock-bonus plans—(1) In general. This paragraph applies to profit-sharing and stock bonus plans. An individual is an active participant in such plans in a taxable year if a forfeiture is allocated to his account as of a date in such taxable year. An individual is also an active participant in a taxable year in such plans if an employer contribution is added to the participant's account in such taxable year. A contribution is added to a participant's account as of the later of the following two dates: the date the contribution is made or the date as of which it is allocated. Thus, if a contribution is made in an individual's taxable year 2 and allocated as of a date in individual's taxable year 1, the later of the relevant dates is the date the contribution is made. Consequently, the individual is an active participant in year 2 but not in year 1 as a result of that contribution.

(2) Special rule. An individual is not an active participant for a particular taxable year by reason of a contribution made in such year allocated to a previous year if such individual was an active participant in such previous year by reason of a prior contribution that was allocated as of a date in such previous year.

(e) Employee contributions. If an employee makes a voluntary or mandatory contribution to a plan described in paragraphs (b), (c) or (d) of this section, such employee is an active participant in the plan for the taxable year in which such contribution is made.

(f) Certain individuals not active participants. For purposes of this section, an individual is not an active participant under a plan for any taxable year of such individual for which such individual elects, pursuant to the plan, not to participate in such plan.

(g) Retirement savings for married individuals. The provisions of this section apply in determining whether an individual or his spouse is an active participant in a plan for purposes of section 220 (relating to retirement savings for certain married individuals).

(h) Examples. The provisions of this section may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). The X Corporation maintains a defined benefit plan which has the following rules on participation and accrual of benefits. Each employee who has attained the age of 25 or has completed one year of service is a participant in the plan. The plan further provides that each participant shall receive upon retirement $12 per month for each year of service in which the employee completes 1000 hours of service. The plan year is the calendar year. B, a calendar-year taxpayer, enters the plan on January 2, 1980, when he is 27 years of age. Since B has attained the age of 25, he is a participant in the plan. However, B completes less than 1000 hours of service in 1980 and 1981. Although B is not accruing any benefits under the plan in 1980 and 1981, he is an active participant under section 219(b)(2) because he is a participant in the plan. Thus, B cannot make deductible contributions to an individual retirement arrangement for his taxable years of 1980 and 1981.

Example (2). The Y Corporation maintains a profit-sharing plan for its employees. The plan year of the plan is the calendar year. C is a calendar-year taxpayer and a prticipant in the plan. On June 30, 1980, the employer makes a contribution for 1980 which is allocated on July 31, 1980. In 1981 the employer makes a second contribution for 1980, allocated as of December 31, 1980. Under the general rule stated in § 1.219-2(d)(1), C is an active participant in 1980. Under the special rule stated in § 1.219-2(d)(2), however, C is not an active participant in 1981 by reason of that contribution made in 1981.

(i) Effective date. The provisions set forth in this section are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

Par. 2. Paragraph (d)(4) of § 1.408-1 is redesignated as paragraph (d)(4) of § 1.408-6, which is added below.

Par. 3. The following new sections are added immediately after § 1.407-1:

§ 1.408-1 General rules.

(a) In general. Section 408 prescribes rules relating to individual retirement accounts and individual retirement annuities. In addition to the rules set forth in §§ 1.408-2 and 1.408-3, relating respectively to individual retirement accounts and individual retirement annuities, the rules set forth in this section shall also apply.

(b) Exemption from tax. The individual retirement account or individual retirement annuity is exempt from all taxes under subtitle A of the Code other than the taxes imposed under section 511, relating to tax on unrelated business income of charitable, etc., organizations.

(c) Sanctions—(1) Excess contributions. If an individual retirement account or individual retirement annuity accepts and retains excess contributions, the individual on whose behalf the account is established or who is the owner of the annuity will be subject to the excise tax imposed by section 4973.

(2) Prohibited transactions by owner or beneficiary of individual retirement account—(i) Under section 408(e)(2), if, during any taxable year of the individual for whose benefit any individual retirement account is established, that individual or the individual's beneficiary engages in any transaction prohibited by section 4975 with respect to such account, such account ceases to be an individual retirement account as of the first day of such taxable year. In any case in which any individual retirement account ceases to be an individual retirement account by reason of the preceding sentence as of the first day of any taxable year, section 408(d)(1) applies as if there were a distribution on such first day in an amount equal to the fair market value (on such first day) of all assets in the account (on such first day). The preceding sentence applies even though part of the fair market value of the individual retirement account as of the first day of the taxable year is attributable to excess contributions which may be returned tax-free under section 408(d)(4) or 408(d)(5).

(ii) If the trust with which the individual engages in any transaction described in subdivision (i) of this subparagraph is established by an employer or employee association under section 408(c), only the employee who engages in the prohibited transaction is subject to disqualification of his separate account.

(3) Prohibited transaction by person other than owner or beneficiary of account. If any person other than the individual on whose behalf an individual retirment account is established or the individual's beneficiary engages in any transaction prohibited by section 4975 with respect to such account, such person shall be subject to the taxes imposed by section 4975.

(4) Pledging account as security. Under section 408(e)(4), if, during any taxable year of the individual for whose benefit an individual retirement account is established, that individual uses the account or any portion thereof as security for a loan, the portion so used is treated as distributed to that individual.

(5) Borrowing on annuity contract. Under section 408(e)(3), if during any taxable year the owner of an individual retirement annuity borrows any money under or by use of such contract, the contract ceases to be an individual retirement annuity as of the first day of such taxable year. See § 1.408-3(c).

(6) Premature distributions. If a distribution (whether a deemed distribution or an actual distribution) is made from an individual retirement account, or individual retirement annuity, to the individual for whose benefit the account was established, or who is the owner of the annuity, before the individual attains age 59½ (unless the individual has become disabled within the meaning of section 72(m)(7)), the tax under Chapter 1 of the Code for the taxable year in which such distribution is received is increased under section 408(f)(1) or (f)(2). The increase equals 10 percent of the amount of the distribution which is includible in gross income for the taxable year. Except in the case of the credits allowable under section 31, 39, or 42, no credit can be used to offset the increased tax described in this subparagraph. See, however, § 1.408-4(c)(3).

(d) Limitation on contributions and benefits. An individual retirement account or individual retirement annuity is subject to the limitation on contributions and benefits imposed by section 415 for years beginning after December 31, 1975.

(e) Community property laws. Section 408 shall be applied without regard to any community property laws.

§ 1.408-2 Individual retirement accounts.

(a) In general. An individual retirement account must be a trust or a custodial account (see paragraph (d) of this section). It must satisfy the requirements of paragraph (b) of this section in order to qualify as an individual retirement account. It may be established and maintained by an individual, by an employer for the benefit of his employees (see paragraph (c) of this section), or by an employee association for the benefit of its members (see paragraph (c) of this section).

(b) Requirements. An individual retirement account must be a trust created or organized in the United States (as defined in section 7701(a)(9)) for the exclusive benefit of an individual or his beneficiaries. Such trust must be maintained at all times as a domestic trust in the United States. The instrument creating the trust must be in writing and the following requirements must be satisfied.

(1) Amount of acceptable contributions. Except in the case of a contribution to a simplified employee pension described in section 408(k) and a rollover contribution described in section 408(d)(3), 402(a)(5), 402(a)(7), 403(a)(4), 403(b)(8) or 409(b)(3)(C), the trust instrument must provide that contributions may not be accepted by the trustee for the taxable year in excess of $1,500 on behalf of any individual for whom the trust is maintained. An individual retirement account maintained as a simplified employee pension may provide for the receipt of up to $7,500 for a calendar year.

(2) Trustee. (i) The trustee must be a bank (as defined in section 401(d)(1) and the regulations thereunder) or another person who demonstrates, in the manner described in paragraph (b)(2)(ii) of this section, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, that the manner in which the trust will be administered will be consistent with the requirements of section 408 and this section.

(ii) A person may demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the manner in which he will administer the trust will be consistent with the requirements of section 408 only upon the filing of a written application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: E:EP, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C. 20224. Such application must meet the applicable requirements of the regulations under section 401(d)(1), relating to nonbank trustees of pension and profit-sharing trusts benefiting owner-employees.

(iii) Section 11.408(a)(2)-1 of the Temporary Income Tax Regulations under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 is superseded by this subparagraph (2).

(3) Life insurance contracts. No part of the trust funds may be invested in life insurance contracts. An individual retirement account may invest in annuity contracts which provide, in the case of death prior to the time distributions commence, for a payment equal to the sum of the premiums paid or, if greater, the cash value of the contract.

(4) Nonforfeitability. The interest of any individual on whose behalf the trust is maintained in the balance of his account must be nonforfeitable.

(5) Prohibition against commingling. (i) The assets of the trust must not be commingled with other property except in a common trust fund or common investment fund.

(ii) For purposes of this subparagraph, the term "common investment fund" means a group trust created for the purpose of providing a satisfactory diversification of investments or a reduction of administrative expenses for the individual participating trusts, and which group trust satisfies the requirements of section 408(c) (except that it need not be established by an employer or an association of employees) and the requirements of section 401(a) in the case of a group trust in which one of the individual participating trusts is an employees' trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a).

(iii) For purposes of this subparagraph, the term "individual participating trust" means an employee's trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) or a trust which satisfies the requirements of section 408(a) provided that in the case of such an employees' trust, such trust would be permitted to participate in such a group trust if all of the other individual participating trusts were employees' trusts described in section 401(a) which are exempt from tax under section 501(a).

(6) Distribution of interest. (i) The trust instrument must provide that the entire interest of the individual for whose benefit the trust is maintained must be distributed to him in accordance with paragraph (b)(6)(ii) or (iii) of this section.

(ii) Unless the provisions of paragraph (b)(6)(iii) of this section apply, the entire interest of the individual must be actually distributed to him not later than the close of his taxable year in which he attains age 70½.

(iii) In lieu of distributing the individual's entire interest as provided in paragraph (b)(6)(ii) of this section, the interest may be distributed commencing not later than the taxable year described in such paragraph (b)(6)(ii). In such case, the trust must expressly provide that the entire interest of the individual will be distributed to the individual and the individual's beneficiaries, in a manner which satisfies the requirements of paragraph (b)(6)(v) of this section, over any of the following periods (or any combination thereof)—

(A) The life of the individual,

(B) The lives of the individual and spouse,

(C) A period certain not extending beyond the life expectancy of the individual, or

(D) A period certain not extending beyond the joint life and last survivor expectancy of the individual and spouse.

(iv) The life expectancy of the individual or the joint life and last survivor expectancy of the individual and spouse cannot exceed the period computed by use of the expected return multiples in § 1.72-9, or, in the case of payments under a contract issued by an insurance company, the period computed by use of the mortality tables of such company.

(v) If an individual's entire interest is to be distributed over a period described in paragraph (b)(6)(iii) of this section, beginning in the year the individual attains 70½ the amount to be distributed each year must be not less than the lesser of the balance of the individual's entire interest or an amount equal to the quotient obtained by dividing the entire interest of the individual in the trust at the beginning of such year (including amounts not in the individual retirement account at the beginning of the year because they have been withdrawn for the purpose of making a rollover contribution to another individual retirement plan) by the life expectancy of the individual (or the joint life and last survivor expectancy of the individual and spouse (whichever is applicable)), determined in either case as of the date the individual attains age 70 in accordance with paragraph (b)(6)(iv) of this section, reduced by one for each taxable year commencing after the individual's attainment of age 70½. An annuity or endowment contract issued by an insurance company which provides for non-increasing payments over one of the periods described in paragraph (b)(6)(iii) of this section beginning not later than the close of the taxable year in which the individual attains age 70½ satisfies this provision. However, no distribution need be made in any year, or a lesser amount may be distributed, if beginning with the year the individual attains age 70½ the aggregate amounts distributed by the end of any year are at least equal to the aggregate of the minimum amounts required by this subdivision to have been distributed by the end of such year.

(vi) If an individual's entire interest is distributed in the form of an annuity contract, then the requirements of section 408(a)(6) are satisfied if the distribution of such contract takes place before the close of the taxable year described in subdivision (ii) of this subparagraph, and if the individual's interest will be paid over a period described in subdivision (iii) of this subparagraph and at a rate which satisfies the requirements of subdivision (v) of this subparagraph.

(vii) In determining whether paragraph (b)(6)(v) of this section is satisfied, all individual retirement plans maintained for an individual's benefit (except those under which he is a beneficiary described in section 408(a)(7)) at the close of the taxable year in which he reaches age 70½ must be aggregated. Thus, the total payments which such individual receives in any taxable year must be at least equal to the amount he would have been required to receive had all the plans been one plan at the close of the taxable year in which he attained age 70½.

(7) Distribution upon death. (i) The trust instrument must provide that if the individual for whose benefit the trust is maintained dies before the entire interest in the trust has been distributed to him, or if distribution has been commenced as provided in paragraph (b)(6) of this section to the surviving spouse and such spouse dies before the entire interest has been distributed to such spouse, the entire interest (or the remaining part of such interest if distribution thereof has commenced) must, within 5 years after the individual's death (or the death of the surviving spouse) be distributed or applied to the purchase of an immediate annuity for this beneficiary or beneficiaries (or the beneficiary or beneficiaries of the surviving spouse) which will be payable for the life of such beneficiary or beneficiaries (or for a term certain not extending beyond the life expectancy of such beneficiary or beneficiaries) and which annuity contract will be immediately distributed to such beneficiary or beneficiaries. A contract described in the preceding sentence is not includible in gross income upon distribution. Section 1.408-4(e) provides rules applicable to the taxation of such contracts. The first sentence of this paragraph (b)(7) shall have no application if distributions over a term certain commenced before the death of the individual for whose benefit the trust was maintained and the term certain is for a period permitted under paragraph (b)(6)(iii) (C) or (D) of this section.

(ii) Each such beneficiary (or beneficiary of a surviving spouse) may elect to treat the entire interest in the trust (or the remaining part of such interest if distribution thereof has commenced) as an account subject to the distribution requirements of section 408(a)(6) and paragraph (b)(6) of this section instead of those of section 408(a)(7) and paragraph (b)(7) of this section. Such an election will be deemed to have been made if such beneficiary treats the account in accordance with the requirements of section 408(a)(6) and paragraph (b)(6) of this section. An election will be considered to have been made by such beneficiary if either of the following occurs: (A) any amounts in the account (including any amounts that have been rolled over, in accordance with the requirements of section 408(d)(3)(A)(i), into an individual retirement account, individual retirement annuity, or retirement bond for the benefit of such individual) have not been distributed within the appropriate time period required by section 408(a)(7) and paragraph (b)(7) of this section; or (B) any additional amounts are contributed to the account (or to the account, annuity, or bond to which the beneficiary has rolled such amounts over, as described in (1) above) which are subject, or deemed to be subject, to the distribution requirements of section 408(a)(6) and paragraph (b)(6) of this section.

(8) Definition of beneficiaries. The term "beneficiaries" on whose behalf an individual retirement account is established includes (except where the context indicates otherwise) the estate of the individual, dependents of the individual, and any person designated by the individual to share in the benefits of the account after the death of the individual.

(c) Accounts established by employers and certain association of employees—(1) In general. A trust created or organized in the United States (as defined in section 7701(a)(9)) by an employer for the exclusive benefit of his employees or their beneficiaries, or by an association of employees for the exclusive benefit of its members or their beneficiaries, is treated as an individual retirement account if the requirements of paragraphs (c)(2) and (c)(3) of this section are satisfied under the written governing instrument creating the trust. A trust described in the preceding sentence is for the exclusive benefit of employees or members even though it may maintain an account for former employees or members and employees who are temporarily on leave.

(2) General requirements. The trust must satisfy the requirements of paragraphs (b)(1) through (7) of this section.

(3) Special requirement. There must be a separate accounting for the interest of each employee or member.

(4) Definitions—(i) Separate accounting. For purposes of paragraph (c)(3) of this section, the term "separate accounting" means that separate records must be maintained with respect to the interest of each individual for whose benefit the trust is maintained. The assets of the trust may be held in a common trust fund, common investment fund, or common fund for the account of all individuals who have an interest in the trust.

(ii) Employee association. For purposes of this paragraph and section 408(c), the term "employee association" means any organization composed of two or more employees, including, but not limited to, an employee association described in section 501(c)(4). Such association may include employees within the meaning of section 401(c)(1). There must be, however, some nexus between the employees (e.g., employees of same employer, employees in the same industry, etc.) in order to qualify as an employee association described in this subdivision (ii).

(d) Custodial accounts. For purposes of this section and section 408 (a), a custodial account is treated as a trust described in section 408(a) if such account satisfies the requirements of section 408(a) except that it is not a trust and if the assets of such account are held by a bank (as defined in section 401(d)(1) and the regulations thereunder) or such other person who satisfies the requirements of paragraph (b)(2)(ii) of this section. For purposes of this chapter, in the case of a custodial account treated as a trust by reason of the preceding sentence, the custodian of such account will be treated as the trustee thereof.

§ 1.408-3 Individual retirement annuities.

(a) In general. An individual retirement annuity is an annuity contract or endowment contract (described in paragraph (e)(1) of this section) issued by an insurance company which is qualified to do business under the law of the jurisdiction in which the contract is sold and which satisfies the requirements of paragraph (b) of this section. A participation certificate in a group contract issued by an insurance company described in this paragraph will be treated as an individual retirement annuity if the contract satisfies the requirements of paragraph (b) of this section; the certificate of participation sets forth the requirements of paragraphs (1) through (5) of section 408(b); the contract provides for a separate accounting of the benefit allocable to each participant-owner; and the group contract is for the exclusive benefit of the participant owners and their beneficiaries. For purposes of this title, a participant-owner of a group contract described in this paragraph shall be treated as the owner of an individual retirement annuity. A contract will not be treated as other than an individual retirement annuity merely because it provides for waiver of premium on disability. An individual retirement annuity contract which satisfies the requirements of section 408(b) need not be purchased under a trust if the requirements of paragraph (b) of this section are satisfied. An individual retirement endowment contract may not be held under a trust which satisfies the requirements of section 408(a). Distribution of the contract is not a taxable event. Distributions under the contract are includible in gross income in accordance with the provisions of § 1.408-4(e).

(b) Requirements—(1) Transferability. The annuity or the endowment contract must not be transferable by the owner. An annuity or endowment contract is transferable if the owner can transfer any portion of his interest in the contract to any person other than the issuer thereof. Accordingly, such a contract is transferable if the owner can sell, assign, discount, or pledge as collateral for a loan or as security for the performance of an obligation or for any other purpose his interest in the contract to any person other than the issuer thereof. On the other hand, a contract is not to be considered transferable merely because the contract contains: a provision permitting the individual to designate a beneficiary to receive the proceeds in the event of his death, a provision permitting the individual to elect a joint and survivor annuity, or other similar provisions.

(2) Annual premium. Except in the case of a contribution to a simplified employee pension described in section 408(k), the annual premium on behalf of any individual for the annuity or the endowment contract cannot exceed $1,500. Any refund of premiums must be applied before the close of the calendar year following the year of the refund toward the payment of future premiums or the purchase of additional benefits.

(3) Distribution. The entire interest of the owner must be distributed to him in the same manner and over the same period as described in § 1.408-2 (b)(6).

(4) Distribution upon death. If the owner dies before the entire interest has been distributed to him, or if distribution has commenced to the surviving spouse, the remaining interest must be distributed in the same manner, over the same period, and to the same beneficiaries as described in § 1.408-2(b)(7).

(5) Nonforfeitability. The entire interest of the owner in the annuity or endowment contract must be nonforfeitable.

(6) Flexible premium. (Reserved)

(c) Disqualification. If during any taxable year the owner of an annuity borrows any money under the annuity or endowment contract or by use of such contract (including, but not limited to, pledging the contract as security for any loan), such contract will cease to be an individual retirement annuity as of the first day of such taxable year, and will not be an individual retirement annuity at any time thereafter. If an annuity or endowment contract which constitutes an individual retirement annuity is disqualified as a result of the preceding sentence, an amount equal to the fair market value of the contract as of the first day of the taxable year of the owner in which such contract is disqualified is deemed to be distributed to the owner. Such owner shall include in gross income for such year an amount equal to the fair market value of such contract as of such first day. The preceding sentence applies even though part of the fair market value of the individual retirement annuity as of the first day of the taxable year is attributable to excess contributions which may be returned tax-free under section 408(d)(4) or 408(d)(5).

(d) Premature distribution tax on deemed distribution. If the individual has not attained age 59½ before the beginning of the year in which the disqualification described in paragraph (c) of this section occurs, see section 408(f)(2) for additional tax on premature distributions.

(e) Endowment contracts—(1) Additional requirements for endowment contracts. No contract providing life insurance protection issued by a company described in paragraph (a) of this section shall be treated as an endowment contract for purposes of this section if—

(i) Such contract matures later than the taxable year in which the individual in whose name the contract is purchased attains the age of 70½;

(ii) Such contract is not for the exclusive benefit of such individual or his beneficiaries;

(iii) Premiums under the contract may increase over the term of the contract;

(iv) When all premiums are paid when due, the cash value of such contract at maturity is less than the death benefit payable under the contract at any time before maturity;

(v) The death benefit does not, at some time before maturity, exceed the greater of the cash value or the sum of premiums paid under the contract;

(vi) Such contract does not provide for a cash value;

(vii) Such contract provides that the life insurance element of such contract may increase over the term of such contract, unless such increase is merely because such contract provides for the purchase of additional benefits;

(viii) Such contract provides insurance other than life insurance and waiver of premiums upon disability; or

(ix) Such contract is issued after November 6, 1978.

(2) Treatment of proceeds under endowment contract upon death of individual. In the case of the payment of a death benefit under an endowment contract upon the death of the individual in whose name the contract is purchased, the portion of such payment which is equal to the cash value immediately before the death of such individual is not excludable from gross income under section 101(a) and is treated as a distribution from an individual retirement annuity. The remaining portion, if any, of such payment constitutes current life insurance protection and is excludable under section 101(a). If a death benefit is paid under an endowment contract at a date or dates later than the death of the individual, section 101(d) is applicable only to the portion of the benefit which is attributable to the amount excludable under section 101(a).

§ 1.408-4 Treatment of distributions from individual retirement arrangements.

(a) General rule—(1) Inclusion in income. Except as otherwise provided in this section, any amount actually paid or distributed or deemed paid or distributed from an individual retirement account or individual retirement annuity shall be included in the gross income of the payee or distributee for the taxable year in which the payment or distribution is received.

(2) Zero basis. Notwithstanding section 1015(d) or any other provision of the Code, the basis (or investment in the contract) of any person in such an account or annuity is zero. For purposes of this section, an assignment of an individual's rights under an individual retirement account or an individual retirement annuity shall, except as provided in § 1.408-4(g) (relating to transfer incident to divorce), be deemed a distribution to such individual from such account or annuity of the amount assigned.

(b) Rollover contribution—(1) To individual retirement arrangement. Paragraph (a)(1) of this section shall not apply to any amount paid or distributed from an individual retirement account or individual retirement annuity to the individual for whose benefit the account was established or who is the owner of the annuity if the entire amount received (including the same amount of money or any other property) is paid into an individual retirement account, annuity (other than an endowment contract), or bond created for the benefit of such individual not later than the 60th day after the day on which he receives the payment or distribution.

(2) To qualified plan. Paragraph (a)(1) of this section does not apply to any amount paid or distributed from an individual retirement account or individual retirement annuity to the individual for whose benefit the account was established or who is the owner of the annuity if—

(i) No amount in the account or no part of the value of the annuity is attributable to any source other than a rollover contribution from an employees' trust destribed in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) or a rollover contribution from an annuity plan described in section 403(a) and the earnings on such sums, and

(ii) The entire amount received (including the same amount of money and any other property) represents the entire amount in the account and is paid into another such trust or plan (for the benefit of such individual) not later than the 60th day after the day on which the payment or distribution is received.

This subparagraph does not apply if any portion of the rollover contribution described in paragraph (b)(2)(i) of this section is attributable to an employees' trust forming part of a plan or an annuity under which the individual was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) at the time contributions were made on his behalf under the plan.

(3) To section 403(b) contract. [Reserved]

(4) Frequency limitation. (i) For taxable years beginning on or before December 31, 1977, paragraph (b)(1) of this section does not apply to any amount received by an individual from an individual retirement account, annuity or bond if at any time during the 3-year period ending on the day of receipt, the individual received any other amount from an individual retirement account, annuity or bond which was not includible in his gross income because of the application of paragraph (b)(1) of this section.

(ii) [Reserved]

(c) Excess contributions returned before due date of return—(1) Excess contribution. For purposes of this paragraph, excess contributions are the excess of the amounts contributed to an individual retirement account or paid for an individual retirement annuity during the taxable year over the amount allowable as a deduction under section 219 or 220 for the taxable year.

(2) General rule. (i) Paragraph (a)(1) of this section does not apply to the distribution of any excess contribution paid during a taxable year to an account or annuity if: the distribution is received on or before the date prescribed by law (including extensions) for filing the individual's return for such taxable year; no deduction is allowed under section 219 or section 220 with respect to the excess contribution; and the distribution is accompanied by the amount of net income attributable to the excess contribution as of the date of the distribution as determined under subdivision (ii).

(ii) The amount of net income attributable to the excess contributions is an amount which bears the same ratio to the net income earned by the account during the computation period as the excess contribution bears to the sum of the balance of the account as of the first day of the taxable year in which the excess contribution is made and the total contribution made for such taxable year. For purposes of this paragraph, the term "computation period" means the period begining on the first day of the taxable year in which the excess contribution is made and ending on the date of the distribution from the account.

(iii) For purposes of paragraph (c)(2)(ii), the net income earned by the account during the computation period is the fair market value of the balance of the account immediately after the distribution increased by the amount of distributions from the account during the computation period, and reduced (but not below zero) by the sum of: (A) the fair market value of the balance of the account as of the first day of the taxable year in which the excess contribution is made and (B) the contributions to the account made during the computation period.

(3) Time of inclusion. (i) For taxable years beginning before January 1, 1977, the amount of net income determined under subparagraph (2) is includible in the gross income of the individual for the taxable year in which it is received. The amount of net income thus distributed is subject to the tax imposed by section 408(f)(1) for the year includible in gross income.

(ii) [Reserved]

(4) Example. The provisions of this paragraph may be illustrated by the following example:

Example. On January 1, 1975, A, age 55, who is a calendar-year taxpayer, contributes $1,500 to an individual retirement account established for his benefit. For 1975, A is entitled to a deduction of $1,400 under section 219. For 1975, A does not claim as deductions any other items listed in section 62. A's gross income for 1975 is $9,334. On April 1, 1976, $107 is distributed to A from his individual retirement account. As of such date, the balance of the account is $1,498 [$1,605 — $107]. There were no other distributions from the account as of such date. The net amount of income earned by the account is $105 [$1,498 + $107 — (0 + $1,500)]. The net income attributable to the excess contribution is $7. [$105 × ($100/$1,500)]. A's adjusted gross income for 1975 is his gross income for 1975 ($9,334) reduced by the amount allowable to A as a deduction under section 219 ($1,400), or $7,934. A will include the $7 of the $107 distributed on April 1, 1976, in his gross income for 1976. Further, A will pay an additional income tax of $.70 for 1976 under section 408(f)(1).

(d) Deemed distribution—(1) General rule. In any case in which an individual retirement account ceases to be an individual retirement account by reason of the application of section 408(e)(2), paragraph (a)(1) of this section shall apply as if there were a distribution on the first day of the taxable year in which such account ceases to be an individual retirement account of an amount equal to the fair market value on such day of all of the assets in the account on such day. In the case of a deemed distribution from an individual retirement annuity, see § 1.408-3(d).

(2) Using account as security. In any case in which an individual for whose benefit an individual retirement account is established uses, directly or indirectly, all or any portion of the account as security for a loan, paragraph (a)(1) of this section shall apply as if there were distributed on the first day of the taxable year in which the loan was made an amount equal to that portion of the account used as security for such loan.

(e) Distribution of annuity contracts. Paragraph (a)(1) of this section does not apply to any annuity contract which is distributed from an individual retirement account and which satisfies the requirements of paragraphs (b)(1), (3), (4) and (5) of section 408. Amounts distributed under such contracts will be taxable to the distributee under section 72. For purposes of applying section 72 to a distribution from such a contract, the investment in such contract is zero.

(f) Treatment of assets distributed from an individual retirement account for the purchase of an endowment contract. Under section 408(e)(5), if all, or any portion, of the assets of an individual retirement account are used to purchase an endowment contract described in § 1.408-3(e) for the benefit of the individual for whose benefit the account is established—

(1) The excess, if any, of the total amount of assets used to purchase such contract over the portion of the assets attributable to life insurance protection shall be treated as a rollover contribution described in section 408(d)(3), and

(2) The portion of the assets attributable to life insurance protection shall be treated as a distribution described in paragraph (a)(1) of this section, except that the provisions of section 408(f) shall not apply to such amount.

(g) Transfer incident to divorce—(1) General rule. The transfer of an individual's interest, in whole or in part, in an individual retirement account, individual retirement annuity, or a retirement bond, to his former spouse under a valid divorce decree or a written instrument incident to such divorce shall not be considered to be a distribution from such an account or annuity to such individual or his former spouse; nor shall it be considered a taxable transfer by such individual to his former spouse notwithstanding any other provision of Subtitle A of the Code.

(2) Spousal account. The interest described in this paragraph (g) which is transferred to the former spouse shall be treated as an individual retirement account of such spouse if the interest is an individual retirement account; an individual retirement annuity of such spouse if such interest is an individual retirement annuity; and a retirement bond of such spouse if such interest is a retirement bond.

§ 1.408-5 Annual reports by trustees or issuers.

(a) In general. The trustee of an individual retirement account or the issuer of an individual retirement annuity shall make annual calendar year reports concerning the status of the account or annuity. The report shall contain the information required in paragraph (b) and be furnished or filed in the manner and time specified in paragraph (c).

(b) Information required to be included in the annual reports. The annual calendar year report shall contain the following information for transactions occurring during the calendar year—

(1) The amount of contributions;

(2) The amount of distributions;

(3) In the case of an endowment contract, the amount of the premium paid allocable to the cost of life insurance;

(4) The name and address of the trustee or issuer; and

(5) Such other information as the Commissioner may require.

(c) Manner and time for filing. (1) The annual report shall be furnished to the individual on whose behalf the account is established or in whose name the annuity is purchased (or the beneficiary of the individual or owner). The report shall be furnished on or before the 30th day of June following the calendar year for which the report is required.

(2) The Commissioner may require the annual report to be filed with the Service at the time the Commissioner specifies.

(d) Penalties. Section 6693 prescribes penalties for failure to file the annual report.

(e) Effective date. This section shall apply to reports for calendar years after 1978.

(f) Reports for years prior to 1979. For years prior to 1979, a trustee or issuer shall make reports in the time and manner as the Commissioner requires.

Par. 4. There is inserted after § 1.408-5 a new section, § 1.408-6, and paragraph (d)(4)(x) and (xi) of this new section as redesignated by paragraph 2 of this Treasury decision is revised to read as set forth below:

§ 1.408-6 Disclosure statements for individual retirement arrangements.

(a) In general—(1) General rule. Trustees and issuers of individual retirement accounts and annuities are, under the authority of section 408(i), required to provide disclosure statements. This section sets forth these requirements.

(2) [Reserved]

(b) [Reserved]

(c) [Reserved]

(d) Requirements. (1) [Reserved]

(2) [Reserved]

(3) [Reserved]

(4) Disclosure statements. * * *

(x) This section shall be effective for disclosure statements and copies of governing instruments mailed, or delivered without mailing, after February 14, 1977.

(xi) This section does not reflect the amendments made by section 1501 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1734) [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 210] relating to retirement savings for certain married individuals.

Par. 5. There are added after § 1.408-6 the following new sections:

§ 1.408-7 Reports on distributions from individual retirement plans.

(a) Requirement of report. The trustee of an individual retirement account or the issuer of an individual retirement annuity who makes a distribution during any calendar year to an individual from such account or under such annuity shall make a report on Form W-2P (in the case of distributions that are not total distributions) or Form 1099R (in the case of total distributions), and their related transmittal forms, for such year. The return must show the name and address of the person to whom the distribution was made, the aggregate amount of such distribution, and such other information as is required by the forms.

(b) Amount subject to this section. The amounts subject to reporting under paragraph (a) include all amounts distributed or made available to which section 408(d) applies.

(c) Time and place for filing. The report required under this section for any calendar year shall be filed after the close of that year and on or before February 28 of the following year with the appropriate Internal Revenue Service Center.

(d) Statement to recipients. (1) Each trustee or issuer required to file Form 1099R or Form W-2P under this section shall furnish to the person whose identifying number is (or should be) shown on the forms a copy of the form.

(2) Each statement required by this paragraph to be furnished to recipients shall be furnished to such persons after November 30 of the year of the distribution and on or before January 31 of the following year.

(e) Effective date. This section is effective for calendar years beginning after December 31, 1977.

§ 1.409-1 Retirement bonds.

(a) In general. Section 409 authorizes the issuance of bonds under the Second Liberty Bond Act the purchase price of which would be deductible under section 219. Section 409 also prescribes the tax treatment of such bonds. See paragraph (b) of this section.

(b) Income tax treatment of bonds—(1) General rule. Except as provided in subparagraph (2) of this paragraph, the entire proceeds upon redemption of a retirement bond described in section 409(a) shall be included in the gross income of the taxpayer entitled to such proceeds. If a bond has not been tendered for redemption by the registered owner before the close of the taxable year in which he attains age 70½, he must include in his gross income for such taxable year the amount of the proceeds he would have received if the bond had been redeemed at age 70½. The provisions of sections 72 and 1232 do not apply to a retirement bond.

(2) Exemptions. (i) If a retirement bond is redeemed within 12 months after the issue date, the proceeds are excluded from gross income if no deduction is allowed under section 219 on account of the purchase of such bond. For definition of issue date, see 31 CFR § 346.1(c).

(ii) If a retirement bond is redeemed after the close of the taxable year in which the registered owner attains age 70½ the proceeds from the redemption of the bond are excludable from the gross income of the registered owner or his beneficiary to the extent that such proceeds were includible in the gross income of the registered owner for such taxable year.

(iii) If a retirement bond is surrendered for reissuance in the same or lesser face amount, the difference between current redemption value of the bond surrendered for reissuance and the current surrender value of the bond reissued is includible in the gross income of the registered owner.

(3) Basis. The basis of a retirement bond is zero.

(c) Rollover. The first sentence of paragraph (b)(1) of this section shall not apply in any case in which a retirement bond is redeemed by the registered owner before the close of the taxable year in which he attains the age of 70½ if he transfers the entire amount of the proceeds of such redemption to—

(1) An individual retirement account described in section 408(a) or an individual retirement annuity described in section 408(b) (other than an endowment contract described in § 1.408-3(e)), or

on or before the 60th day after the day on which he received the proceeds of such redemption. This subparagraph shall not apply in the case of a transfer to a trust or plan described in (c)(2) unless no part of the purchase price of the retirement bond redeemed is attributable to any source other than a rollover contribution from such an employees' trust or annuity plan (other than an annuity plan or employees' trust forming part of a plan under which the individual was an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) at the time contributions were made on his behalf under the plan).

(d) Additional tax. (1) Early redemption. Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this paragraph, under section 409(c) if a retirement bond is redeemed by the registered owner before he attains age 59½, his tax under chapter 1 of the Code is increased by an amount equal to 10 percent of the proceeds of the redemption includible in his gross income for the taxable year. Except in the case of the credits allowable under sections 31, 39, or 42, no credit can be used to offset the tax described in the preceding sentence.

(2) Limitations. Subparagraph (1) of this paragraph shall not apply if—

(i) During the taxable year of the registered owner in which a retirement bond is redeemed, the registered owner becomes disabled within the meaning of section 72(m)(7), or

(ii) A retirement bond is tendered for redemption in accordance with paragraph (b)(2)(i) of this section.

MISCELLANEOUS EXCISE TAXES

(26 CFR Part 54)

Par. 6. The following regulations are added immediately before § 54.4975-6:

§ 54.4974-1 Excise tax on accumulations in individual retirement accounts or annuities.

(a) General rule. A tax equal to 50 percent of the amount by which the minimum amount required to be distributed from an individual retirement account or annuity described in section 408 during the taxable year of the payee under paragraph (b) of this section exceeds the amount actually distributed during the taxable year is imposed by section 4974 on the payee.

(b) Minimum amount required to be distributed. For purposes of this section, the minimum amount required to be distributed is the amount required under § 1.408-2(b)(6)(v) to be distributed in the taxable year described in paragraph (a) of this section.

(c) Examples. The application of this section may be illustrated by the following examples.

Example (1). In 1975, the minimum amount required to be distributed under § 1.408-2(b)(6)(v) to A under his individual retirement account is $100. Only $60 is actually distributed to A in 1975. Under section 4974, A would have an excise tax liability of $20 [50% of ($100 — $60)].

Example (2). Although no distribution is required under § 1.408-2(b)(6)(v) to be made in 1986, H, a married individual born on February 1, 1921, who has established and maintained an individual retirement account, decides to begin receiving distributions from the account beginning in 1986. H's wife, W, was born on March 6, 1921. H and W are calendar year taxpayers. H decides to receive his interest in the account over the joint life and last survivor expectancy of himself and his wife. On January 1, 1986, the balance in H's account is $10,000; H and W, based on their nearest birthdates, are 65; and the joint life and last survivor expectancy of H and his wife is 22.0 years (see Table II of § 1.72-9). His annual payments during the following years (none of which were required) were determined by dividing the balance in the account on the first day of each year by the joint life and last survivor expectancy reduced by the number of whole years elapsed since the distributions were to commence.

Date	Life expectancy minus whole years elapsed	Account Balance at beginning of each year	Annual payment
1-1-86	22.0	$10,000	$455
1-1-87	21.0	$10,118	$482
1-1-88	20.0	$10,214	$511
1-1-89	19.0	$10,285	$541
1-1-90	18.0	$10,329	$574
1-1-90	17.0	$10,340	$608

For 1986, 1987, 1989, and 1990, the amount required to be distributed under § 1.408-2(b)(6)(v) is zero. Thus, H would have no excise tax liability under section 4974 for these years. In 1991, the year H attains age 70½, the amount required to be distributed from the account under § 1.408-2(b)(6)(v) is $565, determined by dividing $10,340 (the account balance as of January 1, 1991) by 18.3 years (the joint life and last survivor expectancy of H and W, assuming they are both still living, as of January 1, 1991). If W should die after December 31, 1990, the joint life and last survivor expectancy determined on January 1, 1991 (18.3 years) would not be redetermined. Because the amount distributed from the account in 1991 ($608) exceeds the amount required to be distributed from the account in 1991 ($565), H has no excise tax liability under section 4974 for 1991.

Example (3). Assume the same facts as in example (2) except that W dies in 1988.

For 1988, 1989, and 1990, the amount required to be distributed under § 1.408-2 (b) (6) (v) is zero. Thus, H would have no excise tax liability under section 4974 for these years. In 1991, the amount required to be distributed under § 1.408-2(b) (6) (v) is $855, determined by dividing $10,340 (the account balance as of January 1, 1991) by 12.1 years (the life expectancy of H as of January 1, 1991). Because the amount distributed from the account in 1991 ($608) is less than the amount required to be distributed from the account in 1991 ($855), H has an excise tax liability of $123.50 under section 4974 for 1991 [50% of ($855 — $608)].

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in section 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 917; 26 U.S.C. 7805).

Section 6694.—Understatement of Taxpayer's Liability by Income Tax Return Preparer

26 CFR 1.6694-1: Understatement of taxpayer's liability by income tax return preparer.

Return preparer; mathematical or clerical error. An inadvertent error made by a return preparer in either listing or totaling on Schedule B, Form 1040, the separate amounts shown on Forms 1099-INT furnished by a taxpayer that does not result in substantial understatement of tax and is the only error on the return does not subject the preparer to the negligence penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-262 [1]

ISSUE

Does the penalty for negligent disregard of rules and regulations under section 6694(a) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to a preparer in the following situations?

FACTS

Situation 1

The taxpayer furnished the income tax return preparer with all of the Forms 1099-INT, Statement for Recipients of Interest Income, that the taxpayer had received. The preparer failed to list the amount shown on one of the Forms 1099-INT on schedule B of Form 1040, U.S. Individual Income Tax Return. Upon examination of the return by the Service, it was determined that the omission resulted in an understatement of tax liability. However, the amount of the understatement was not substantial and the omission was the only error on the return.

The preparer stated that the reason for the failure to report the omitted amount was that the Form 1099-INT showing the omitted amount was overlooked.

Situation 2

The taxpayer furnished the income tax return preparer with all of the Forms 1099-INT that the taxpayer had received. The preparer correctly listed all of the amounts shown on the Forms 1099-INT on schedule B of Form 1040 but made an error in totalling the separate amounts. Upon examination of the return by the Service, it was determined that the error resulted in an understatement of tax liability. However, the amount of the understatement was not substantial and the omission was the only error on the return.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Rev. Proc. 80-40, page 22, this Bulletin, sets forth guidelines for the application of the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax return preparer. The revenue procedure indicates that the Service will consider the nature of the error causing the understatement, the frequency of the errors and the materiality of the errors. Rev. Proc. 80-40 specifically provides that an isolated mathematical or clerical error ordinarily reflects no more than mere inadvertence and thus will not result in the assertion of the penalty unless the error is of such magnitude or so conspicuous that it should have been discovered after its commission.

Under the facts as stated the error in situation 1 was clerical in nature and the error in situation 2 was mathematical in nature. Furthermore, in each situation, the error was the only error on the return and the amount of the understatement was not substantial.

HOLDING

The penalty for negligent disregard of rules and regulations does not apply to the preparers in either situation 1 or 2.

normal office practice was to review the taxpayer-provided information, check the return for completeness, and check the tax computation, there was a pattern of errors on the return, and the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code applies.

Rev. Rul. 80-263 [1]

ISSUE

Does the penalty for negligent disregard of rules and regulations under section 6694(a) of the Internal Revenue Code apply in the following situation?

FACTS

The taxpayer furnished the income tax return preparer with all of the Forms 1099-INT, Statement for Recipients of Interest Income, and Forms 1099-DIV, Statement for Recipients of Dividends and Distributions, that the taxpayer had received. The preparer failed to list the amount shown on one of the Forms 1099-INT and on one of the Forms 1099-DIV on Schedule B, Interest and Dividend Income, of Form 1040, U.S. Individual Income Tax Return. Also, the preparer made an error in totalling the amounts of itemized deductions on Schedule A, Itemized Deductions, and used the wrong tax table in determining the tax. Upon examination of the return the Internal Revenue Service determined that these errors resulted in an understatement of liability. None of these understatements was substantial in amount.

The preparer stated that these errors were merely oversights and demonstrated that the preparer's normal practice was to review the information provided by the taxpayer, review the return to check for completeness, and check the computation of the tax.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 6694(a) of the Code provides that if any part of any understatement of liability with respect to any return is due to the negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations by any person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return, such person shall pay a penalty of $100 with respect to such return.

Rev. Proc. 80-40, page 22, this Bulletin, sets forth guidelines for the application of the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax return preparer. The revenue procedure indicates that the Service will consider the nature of the error causing the understatement, the frequency of the errors and the materiality of the errors. The revenue procedure also provides that where all the relevant facts and circumstances suggest that the return was negligently prepared, the penalty will not be asserted if (1) the preparer's normal office practice, when considered together with other facts and circumstances, indicated that the error in question would rarely occur and (2) the normal office practice was followed in preparing the return in question.

Although each error, if the sole error on the return, would not result in the imposition of the penalty, all of the errors taken together suggest that the return was negligently prepared. In addition, although the preparer alleged that the preparer's normal office practice, considered with other facts and circumstances, indicated that the errors in question would rarely occur, in this situation the normal office practice of the preparer will not relieve the preparer from the penalty because there is a pattern of errors on the return.

HOLDING

The penalty for negligent disregard of rules or regulations applies.

Return preparer; normal office practice; failure to report minimum tax liability. A return preparer who failed to report a minimum tax liability showed that normal office practice, when taken together with other factors, indicated that the minimum tax error would rarely occur and that normal office practice was followed in preparing the return. Rev. Rul. 80-264 [1]

ISSUE

Does the penalty for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations under section 6694(a) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to a preparer in the following situation?

FACTS

An income tax return preparer failed to report a substantial minimum tax liability resulting from a net capital gain deduction shown on the individual taxpayer's 1978 return. This was the only error on the return. The preparer agreed that there was an understatement on the return and explained that the failure to report the minimum tax was due to an oversight. To show that the preparer's normal office practice was to correctly apply the minimum tax provisions, the preparer presented a checklist that showed when the minimum tax must be considered. The workpapers of the preparer for the return in question indicated that the checklist had been reviewed. Consideration of the knowledge of the preparer, the internal procedures for review, and other facts and circumstances indicated that this error would rarely occur.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 56(a) of the Code provides for the imposition of an income tax on certain items of tax preference. Section 57(a)(9)(A) treats as a tax preference item an amount equal to the net capital gain deduction for the taxable year determined under section 1202. For taxable years ending prior to January 1, 1979, such item was taxed under section 56(a). For years beginning after December 31, 1978, such item is taxed under section 55 (relating to the alternative minimum tax).

Section 6694(a) of the Code provides that if any part of any understatement of liability with respect to any return is due to the negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations by any person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return, such person shall pay a penalty of $100 with respect to such return.

Rev. Rul. 80-28, 1980-4 I.R.B. 14, holds that an income tax return preparer who failed to report a minimum tax liability on an individual taxpayer's income tax return because of an oversight was required to pay a penalty for negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations.

Rev. Proc. 80-40, page 22, this Bulletin, sets forth guidelines for the application of the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax preparer. This revenue procedure indicates that the Service will consider the nature of the error causing the understatement, the frequency of the errors and the materiality of the errors. The revenue procedure also provides that where the facts and circumstances suggest that the return was negligently prepared, the penalty will not be asserted if (1) the preparer's normal office practice, when considered together with other facts and circumstances, indicates that the error in question would rarely occur and (2) the normal office practice was followed in preparing the return in question.

The facts and circumstances suggested that the return was negligently prepared by the preparer. Although the failure to report the minimum tax was the only error on the return, the amount of the understatement was substantial and the error could have been discovered by reviewing the return. However, the preparer showed that the preparer's normal office practice, when taken together with other facts and circumstances, indicates that the error in question would rarely occur and that the normal office practice was followed in preparing the return in question. Furthermore, the error is not a flagrant one.

HOLDING

The preparer is not liable for a penalty for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations.

26 CFR 1.6694-1: Understatement of taxpayer's liability by income tax return preparer.

Return preparer; failure to report income deducted on related return. A return preparer who prepared both an individual's return and the return of the individual's wholly owned corporation deducted interest paid by the corporation to the individual on the corporate return, but did not report the interest as income on the individual's return. The negligence penalty does not apply to the preparer if the information provided by the corporation did not indicate who received the interest and the information provided by the individual did not indicate receipt of such payment. However, the penalty would apply if the information provided by the corporation indicated that the individual received the interest payment.

Rev. Rul. 80-265 [1]

ISSUE

Does the penalty for negligent disregard of rules and regulations under section 6694(a) of the Internal Reve- Code apply in the following situations?

FACTS

Situation 1

An income tax return preparer prepared both A's individual federal income tax return for calendar year 1978 and the corporate income tax return of X, A's wholly-owned corporation for its taxable year ended December 31, 1978. The preparer was not the auditor of X and had no knowledge whatsoever of any loans by A to X. The preparer deducted interest paid by X to A on the corporation's return filed March 15, 1979. However, the preparer did not report the interest as income on A's individual return filed April 15, 1979. The information provided by X to the preparer did not indicate who received the interest payment and the information provided by A to the preparer did not indicate receipt of such payment. Upon examination the Internal Revenue Service determined that the failure to report the interest income resulted in an understatement of tax liability on A's individual return.

Situation 2

The facts are the same as in situation 1 except that the information provided by X indicated A received the interest payment from X.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 6694(a) of the Code provides that if any part of any understatement of liability with respect to any return is due to the negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations by any person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return, such person shall pay a penalty of $100 with respect to such return.

Under section 61 of the Code interest received on loans are includable in gross income.

Rev. Proc. 80-40, page 22, this Bulletin, sets forth guidelines for the application of the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax return preparer. The revenue procedure indicates that the penalty generally will not apply where a preparer in good faith relies without verification upon information furnished by the taxpayer, but the preparer may not ignore the implications of information furnished to the preparer or actually known to the preparer.

In situation 1, the preparer could rely upon the information furnished by A in connection with A's individual return. The preparer was not required to examine or review A's books and records and had no reason to believe that the information as furnished might be incorrect or incomplete.

In situation 2, the preparer, based on the information furnished by X, in connection with X's corporate return, had reason to believe that the information furnished by A might be incorrect or incomplete. The preparer should have made inquiries to reconcile the information furnished by X with the omission by A of the interest income.

Return preparer; reliance on taxpayer's assurances; entertainment expenses. A return preparer who asks a taxpayer if entertainment expense substantiation that satisfies the requirements of section 274(d) of the Code exists and receives assurances that it does will not be subject to the negligence penalty under section 6694(a) as a result of the taxpayer's failure to substantiate the expenses in an audit. A return preparer who does not ask for such assurances will be subject to the penalty, as will the first preparer in a subsequent year if the same assurances are received and the preparer is aware of the prior audit results.

Rev. Rul. 80-266 [1]

ISSUE

Does the penalty for negligent disregard of rules and regulations under section 6694(a) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to an income tax return preparer where the preparer relied upon incorrect information provided by the taxpayer?

FACTS

Situation 1

A preparer was engaged to prepare a tax return of a taxpayer who claimed to have incurred deductible entertainment expenses. The preparer inquired whether the taxpayer had records showing the amount, the time, the place and the business purpose of the expenses and the business relationship to the taxpayer of the persons entertained in accordance with the requirements of section 274(d) of the Code. The taxpayer represented to the preparer that it had such records. The preparer then prepared the return claiming a reduction for entertainment expenses in the amount indicated by the taxpayer.

Upon examination, the Service disallowed a portion of the claimed deductions because the taxpayer could not substantiate with respect to certain expenses either the business purpose or the business relationship of some of the persons entertained. This determination resulted in an understatement of tax liability as defined in section 6694(e) of the Code.

Situation 2

The facts are the same as in situation 1 except that the preparer did not inquire whether the taxpayer had adequate records, and the taxpayer did not make any representations that it had such records. The preparer did not adequately demonstrate that the preparer's normal office practice should prevent the assertion of the penalty.

Situation 3

The preparer in situation 1 completed the return of the same taxpayer for the year following the examination. The taxpayer again claimed to have incurred deductible entertainment expenses. The preparer inquired whether the taxpayer had records showing the amount, the time, the place, and the business purpose of the expenses, and the business relationship to the taxpayer of the persons entertained. The taxpayer again represented that it had such records. The preparer did not make a further inquiry although the preparer was aware that the taxpayer could not substantiate certain entertainment deductions during the examination in the prior year.

Upon examination the Service again disallowed a portion of the deductions claimed by the taxpayer for entertainment because the taxpayer could not substantiate with respect to certain expenses either the business purpose or the business relationship of some of the persons entertained. This determination resulted in an understatement of tax liability.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 6694(a) of the Code provides that if any part of any underpayment of liability with respect to any return is due to the negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations by any person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return, such person shall pay a penalty of $100 with respect to such return.

Section 274(d) of the Code provides that no deduction will be allowed for travel and entertainment unless the taxpayer substantiates it with adequate records.

Rev. Proc. 80-40, page 22, this Bulletin, sets forth guidelines for the application of the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax return preparer, including factors that will be taken into consideration in determining whether the penalty will be applied. The revenue procedure provides that a preparer must make appropriate inquiries to determine the existence of facts and circumstances required by a Code section or regulations as a condition to claiming a deduction.

In situation 1 the preparer made appropriate inquiries as to whether the taxpayer had records adequate to meet the requirements of section 274(d) and the regulations thereunder. Because the taxpayer represented that it had such records, it was proper for the preparer to claim the deduction.

In situation 2 the preparer failed to inquire whether the taxpayer had records adequate to meet the requirements of section 274(d) of the Code and the regulations thereunder.

In situation 3 the preparer was aware that the taxpayer could not substantiate some of the entertainment deductions in the examination during the prior year and thus had reason to believe that the taxpayer might not have adequate records for the current year. Therefore, although the inquiry made by the preparer was sufficient in situation 1, it was not sufficient in situation 3. The preparer should have made further inquiries to reconcile the inadequacy of the records in the recent examination of an earlier year with the taxpayer's representation in order to reasonably conclude that the taxpayer now has adequate records.

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to provide guidelines for the application of the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Internal Revenue Code for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax return preparer. The revenue procedure indicates some of the factors that will be taken into consideration in determining whether this penalty will be applied.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

.01 Section 6694(a) of the Code provides that if any part of any understatement with respect to any return or claim for refund is due to the negligent or intentional disregard of rules and regulations by any person who is an income tax return preparer with respect to such return or claim, such person shall pay a penalty of $100 with respect to such return or claim.

.02 Section 6694(e) of the Code provides that an "understatement of liability" means any understatement of the net amount payable with respect to any income tax.

.03 Section 1.6694-1(a)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a preparer is not considered to have negligently or intentionally disregarded a rule or regulation if the preparer exercises due diligence in an effort to apply the rules and regulations to the information given to the preparer to determine the taxpayer's correct liability for tax.

.04 Section 1.6694-1(a)(5) of the regulations provides that the preparer bears the burden of proof on the issue of whether the preparer has negligently or intentionally disregarded a rule or regulation.

.05 The Conference Report on the Revenue Act of 1978 relating to Technical Corrections to the Tax Reform Act of 1976, H.R. Rep. No. 95-1800, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 284 (1978), 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 521, 618, states that the Service shall reasonably interpret section 6694(a) according to the standards of section 6653(a) and in light of all the facts and circumstances of each case taking into account any and all mitigating factors.

.06 The case of Marcello v. Commissioner, 380 F. 2d 499, 506 (5th Cir. 1967) holds that negligence is lack of due care or failure to do what a reasonable and ordinary prudent person would do under the circumstances.

SEC. 3. SCOPE

The scope of this revenue procedure is to provide guidelines for the application of the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code for the negligent disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax return preparer. These guidelines do not apply to the penalty under section 6694(a) for the intentional disregard of rules and regulations by an income tax return preparer.

SEC. 4. APPLICATION

.01 In determining whether the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code is to be asserted, all the relevant facts and circumstances of each case will be taken into account. In making this determination, the following factors will be taken into consideration.

1 Nature of the Error Causing the Understatement. Was the provision that was misapplied or not discovered so complex, uncommon, or highly technical that a competent preparer of returns of the type at issue might reasonably be unaware or mistaken as to its applicability? Should a general review of the return have disclosed the error to the preparer? For example, although an isolated mathematical or clerical error ordinarily reflects no more than mere inadvertence and thus will not result in the assertion of the penalty, such an error may be of such a magnitude or be so conspicuous that it should have been discovered after its commission.

2 Frequency of Errors. Is the understatement the result of an isolated error or is it the result of a number of errors? Although an isolated error may result in the assertion of the penalty if sufficiently obvious, flagrant or material, the negligence penalty generally will not be asserted for an isolated error. On the other hand, a pattern of errors on a return is presumptive of negligence and generally will result in the assertion of the penalty even though no one error occurring in isolation would have triggered the penalty.

3 Materiality of Errors. Is the understatement material in relation to the correct tax liability? The negligence penalty generally will not be asserted if the understatement is of a relatively immaterial amount. Nevertheless, the understatement, even though immaterial in amount, may result in the assertion of the penalty if the error or errors creating the understatement are sufficiently obvious, flagrant or numerous. An error resulting in a material understatement may be a greater indication of negligence than a similar error resulting in a less material understatement.

.02 Where all the relevant facts and circumstances suggest that the return was negligently prepared, the penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code generally will not be asserted if (1) the preparer's normal office practice, when considered together with other facts and circumstances such as the knowledge of the preparer, indicates that the error in question would rarely occur and (2) the normal office practice was followed in preparing the return in question. Examples of normal office practice include a system to promote acuracy and consistency in the preparation of returns, such as a checklist, a method for obtaining the necessary information from the taxpayer, examining the prior year's return, and review procedures. The normal office practice of the preparer will not be relevant where the error is flagrant, or there is either a pattern of errors on a particular return or an error is repeated on numerous returns.

.03 The penalty under section 6694(a) of the Code generally will not apply where a preparer in good faith relies without verification upon information furnished by the taxpayer. Thus, the preparer is not required to audit, examine or review books and records, business operations, or documents or other evidence in order to verify independently the taxpayer's information. However, the preparer may not ignore the implications of information furnished to the preparer or which was actually known by the preparer. The preparer shall make reasonable inquiries if the information as furnished appears to be incorrect or incomplete. Additionally, some sections of the Code require the existence of specific facts and circumstances, such as maintenance of specific documents, before a deduction may properly be claimed. The preparer shall make appropriate inquiries to determine the existence of facts and circumstances required by a Code section or regulations as a condition to claiming a deduction.

Announcement of the Disbarment, Suspension, or Consent to Voluntary Suspension of Attorneys, Certified Public Accountants, Enrolled Agents and Enrolled Actuaries from Practice before the Internal Revenue Service

Under 31 Code of Federal Regulations, Part 10, an attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary, in order to avoid the institution or conclusion of a proceeding for his disbarment or suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service, may offer his consent to suspension from such practice. The Director of Practice, in his discretion, may suspend an attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary in accordance with the consent offered.

Attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents and enrolled actuaries are prohibited in any Internal Revenue Service matter from directly or indirectly employing, accepting assistance from, being employed by or sharing fees with, any practitioner disbarred or under suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

To enable attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents and enrolled actuaries to identify practitioners under consent suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service, the Director of Practice will announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin the names and addresses of practitioners who have been suspended from such practice, their designation as attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary, and the date or period of suspension. This announcement will appear in the weekly Bulletin at the earliest practicable date after such action and will continue to appear in the weekly Bulletins for five successive weeks or for as many weeks as is practicable for each attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary so suspended and will later be consolidated and published in the Cumulative Bulletin.

The following individual has been placed under consent suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service:

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Section 404.—Deduction for Contributions of an Employer to an Employees' Trust or Annuity Plan and Compensation Under a Deferred-Payment Plan

26 CFR 1.404(a)-1: Contributions of an employer to an employees' trust or annuity plan and compensation under a deferred payment plan; general rule.

Contributions; short taxable year. Rules are provided for determining the limitation on contributions to a qualified pension plan under section 404 of the Code for a short taxable year by an employer that has consistently determined the deductible limit for each taxable year on the basis of the plan year beginning in such taxable year; Rev. Ruls. 55-428 and 56-672 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-267

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

This revenue ruling provides rules for determining the deductible limit under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1, in the case of a short taxable year where the employer has consistently determined the deductible limit for each taxable year on the basis of the plan year beginning in such taxable year.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND AND GENERAL INFORMATION

Section 404(a)(1)(A) of the Code provides general guidelines governing the deductibility of contributions to qualified pension plans.

Section 404(a)(1)(D) of the Code provides that any amount paid in a taxable year in excess of the amount deductible in such year shall be deductible in the succeeding years in order of time to the extent of the difference between the amount paid and deductible in each such succeeding year and the maximum amount deductible for such year.

Prior to the enactment of ERISA, Rev. Rul. 55-428, 1955-2 C.B. 230, together with Rev. Rul. 56-672, 1956-2 C.B. 295, provided that in the case of a short taxable year, the employer may take as a deduction a pro rata portion of both the normal cost and 10 percent of the cost of past service or supplemental benefits as of the date such benefits were provided under the plan.

Section 404(a)(1) of the Code, as amended by ERISA, changes the method for determining the deductible limits in several ways. These changes affect the deductible limit in a short taxable year.

SEC. 3. GENERAL RULE

In the case of a short taxable year, where the employer has consistently determined the deductible limit for each taxable year on the basis of the plan year beginning in the taxable year and where the plan year begins in the short taxable year, the employer may determine the deductible limit by the Weighted Average Method or the Special Allowance Method as described below.

Once a method is selected, the employer must consistently apply that method in determining the deductible limit.

SEC. 4. WEIGHTED AVERAGE METHOD

.011 Under the Weighted Average Method, where the deduction is being claimed in the short taxable year under section 404(a)(1)(A)(ii) or (iii) of the Code, the deductible limit in the short taxable year is the product of the deductible limit otherwise applicable under such section and the tax year ratio (the number of months in the short taxable year divided by 12).

.012 For subsequent taxable years, the deductible limit is the weighted average of the deductible limits for the plan year ending within the taxable year and for the plan year commencing in that taxable year. This amount is computed by adding—

(1) The deductible limit for the plan year ending within the taxable year multiplied by the difference between 1 and the tax year ratio as defined in section 4.011, and

(2) The deductible limit for the plan year commencing within the taxable year multiplied by the tax year ratio.

The deductible limits referred to in section 4.012(1) and (2) are the limits as determined under section 404 (a)(1)(A)(i), (ii), or (iii), whichever is applicable.

.021 Under the Weighted Average Method, where the deduction in the short taxable year is being claimed under section 404(a)(1)(A)(i) of the Code, the deductible limit in the short taxable year equals the sum of—

(1) The debit balance (if any) in the funding standard account as of the end of the previous plan year (without regard to the alternative minimum funding standard account) increased with interest to the end of the short taxable year, and

(2) The tax year ratio multiplied by the excess (if any) of the amount necessary to satisfy the minimum funding requirements for the plan year beginning in the short taxable year (including interest charges and credits only to the end of the short taxable year) over the amount determined in section 4.021(1).

.022 Under the Weighted Average Method, for the first taxable year after the short taxable year, where the deduction in the short taxable year was claimed under section 404(a)(1)(A)(i) of the Code, the deductible limit is the sum of—

(1) The amount which is necessary to satisfy the minimum funding requirements for the plan year beginning in the short taxable year, and which was not deductible in the short taxable year, and

(2) The tax year ratio multiplied by the deductible limit determined under section 404(a)(1)(A)(i), (ii) or (iii) of the Code (whichever is applicable) attributable to the plan year beginning in the taxable year.

.023 For subsequent taxable years, the deductible limit is the weighted average, as computed under section 4.012, of the deductible limit determined for the plan year ending within the taxable year and the deductible limit determined for the plan year commencing within the taxable year.

SEC. 5. SPECIAL ALLOWANCE METHOD

Under the Special Allowance Method the deductible limit under section 404(a)(1)(A)(i), (ii), and (iii) of the Code for a short taxable year is the same as under the Weighted Average Method. However, under the Special Allowance Method, the deductible limit in all of the taxable years following the short taxable year equals the sum of the deductible limit for the plan year beginning in such taxable year plus (if the contribution for the short year exceeded the deductible limit for such year) a special allowance. The special allowance is ten percent of the special allowance amount.

To compute the special alowance amount, subtract the deductible limit determined under the Special Allowance Method for the short taxable year from the lesser of (1) the amount necessary to satisfy the minimum funding requirement for the plan year beginning in the short taxable year or (2) the employer contribution made for the short taxable year. This special allowance can be used only for the first ten taxable years after the short taxable year.

SEC. 6. ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury as required under section 446(e) of the Code, the employer may determine the deductible limit under the End of Plan Year Method. Under this method, the employer (1) takes no deduction for plan costs in the short taxable year and (2) changes the method for determining the deductible limit so that the limit is determined for the plan year ending within the taxable year.

SEC. 7. EXAMPLE

For the taxable year beginning January 1, 1977, an employer has changed its annual accounting period from the taxable year ending December 31, creating a short taxable year ending May 31. The employer has consistently deducted amounts contributed in a taxable year for the cost attributable to the plan year beginning in such taxable year. For the short period January 1, 1977 to May 31, 1977, the employer intends to contribute the amount necessary to satisfy the minimum funding standard provided by Code section 412(a) for the plan year beginning April 1, 1977.

The minimum required contribution for the plan year beginning April 1, 1977, is $100,000, and there is no debit balance in the funding standard account as of March 31, 1977. If the taxable year were not a short year, the deductible limit determined under section 404(a)(1)(A)(ii) of the Code would be $110,000.

The deductible limit under section 404(a)(1)(A)(i) of the Code for the short taxable year January 1, 1977—May 31, 1977, is $41,667 ($0, the debit balance for the previous year + [($100,000, the minimum required contribution — $0) × 5/12]). The deductible limit under section 404(a)(1)(A)(ii) is $45,833 ($110,000 × 5/12).

If the employer contributes $100,000 and the End of Plan Year Method is not elected, the amount contributed in excess of the deductible limit in the short taxable year ($54,167) is considered a contribution carryover within the meaning of section 404(a)(1)(D) of the Code for a future taxable year.

For the plan year beginning April 1, 1978, the minimum required contribution is $110,000 and the deductible limit for the taxable year June 1, 1977—May 31, 1978, determined under section 404(a)(1)(A)(ii) of the Code (without regard to the fact that the previous taxable year was a short year) is $150,000. However, a special allowance amount is also calculated.

The special allowance amount ($54,167) is the excess of the lesser of (1) the amount necessary to satisfy the minimum funding requirement for the plan year beginning in the short taxable year ($100,000) or (2) the employer contribution in the short taxable year ($100,000), over the deductible limit determined under the Special Allowance Method for the short taxable year which is the greater of the deductible limit determined under section 404(a)(1)(A)(i) of the Code ($41,667) or the deductible limit determined under section 404(a)(1)(A)(ii) of the Code ($45,833). Therefore, the maximum deductible amount under section 404(a)(1)(A)(ii) of the Code is determined using either method below:

(1) Weighted Average Method: $126,667 [($110,000 × 7/12) + ($150,000 × 5/12)]

(2) Special Allowance Method: $155,417 [$150,000 + (10% × $54,167)]

SEC. 8. EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Ruls. 55-428 and 56-672 are amplified.

Section 408.—Individual Retirement Accounts

(Also Section 165; 26 CFR 1.165-1.)

Individual retirement programs; loss on total distribution. An individual received the cash surrender value of an individual retirement account (IRA) annuity, which had been purchased three months earlier, as a total distribution under section 408(d)(4) of the Code that was less than the individual's cost of the annuity. The individual may not claim an ordinary loss deduction on the difference between the cost and the cash surrender value.

Advice has been requested whether a taxpayer has a deductible loss on investments purchased with amounts contributed to an individual retirement account (IRA), as described in sections 408 and 409 of the Internal Revenue Code, under the circumstances set forth below.

A, a calendar year taxpayer under age 59½, purchased an individual retirement annuity in June of 1978 for $1,500, the maximum amount allowable as a deduction under section 219 (b)(1) of the Code. A revoked this annuity three months later upon joining a company and participating immediately in its qualified pension plan. A received a total distribution from the annuity of $1,300, the cash surrender value to which A was entitled under the terms of the policy. A did not claim a deduction for 1978 under section 219, but did deduct the excess of the investment in the contract ($1,500) over the amount received upon surrender of the contract ($1,300) as an ordinary loss.

Section 165(c)(2) of the Code provides, in part, that an individual shall be allowed to deduct any loss sustained during the taxable year in any transaction entered into for profit.

Revenue Ruling 61-201, 1961-2 C.B. 46, illustrates the circumstances under which an individual may claim a deduction on his or her federal income tax return for a loss sustained upon the cashing in of an annuity for its surrender value. This ruling states that the original purchaser of a single premium refund annuity contract may claim an ordinary loss deduction if the individual's basis in the contract, subject to certain adjustments, exceeds the amount received upon surrender of the contract.

Sections 219 and 220 of the Code set forth the restrictions on an individual's eligibility to claim a deduction on the federal income tax return for amounts contributed to an individual retirement annuity described in section 408(b).

Section 408 of the Code establishes the requirements which annuities must meet in order to maintain their status as IRA's, and section 408(d) specifies the taxability of amounts distributed from IRA's.

As provided by section 408(d)(1) of the Code, any amount paid out of an IRA (unless otherwise excepted) is to be included in an individual's gross income for the year in which received. Section 408(d)(1) also provides that, notwithstanding any other provision of Title 26 of the United States Code, the basis of an individual in an IRA is zero.

Section 408(d)(4) of the Code provides one exception to the taxability provisions of section 408(d)(1). Section 408(d)(4) states that section 408 (d)(1) shall not apply to the distribution of a contribution made during the year to an IRA, to the extent that the contribution exceeds the amount allowable as a deduction under section 219 or 220, if the following conditions are met: (1) the distribution is received on or before the day on which the individual is required to file his or her Federal income tax return for such year; (2) no deduction is allowed under section 219 or 220 for the excess contribution; and (3) the distribution is accompanied by any net income attributable to the excess contribution. Thus, an individual who utilizes the withdrawal provisions of section 408 (d)(4) is relieved from the requirement of section 408(d)(1) that all amounts distributed from an IRA be included in gross income.

A was not eligible to maintain an IRA for 1978, so no amount was allowable as a deduction under section 219 of the Code on A's Federal income tax return for that year. Therefore, A's contributions to the IRA were excess contributions within the meaning of section 408(d)(4). The requirement of section 408(d)(1) that all amounts be included in gross income did not apply to the distribution from the IRA because A utilized the provisions of section 408(d)(4) to withdraw the entire balance from the IRA before the date for filing A's tax return. Thus, A was not required to include in gross income the distribution from the annuity.

Section 408(d)(1) of the Code, however, precluded A from establishing a basis in the contract. As a result, no loss was incurred when A cashed in the annuity for its surrender value.

Accordingly, A is not entitled to an ordinary loss deduction on A's 1978 Federal income tax return.

Section 501.—Exemption from Tax on Corporations, Certain Trusts, Etc.

26 CFR 1.501(c)(3)-1: Organizations organized and operated for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals.

Political activity; newsletter publication. Certain publications of congressional incumbents' voting records on selected issues in a nonpartisan newsletter do not constitute participation or intervention in any political campaign within the meaning of section 501(c)(3) of the Code; Rev. Rul. 78-248 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-282

ISSUE

Would the publication of a newsletter, by an organization otherwise described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, containing the voting records of congressional incumbents on selected issues, in the manner described below, constitute participation or intervention in any political campaign within the meaning of section 501(c)(3)?

FACTS

The organization is exempt from federal income tax under section 501 (c)(3) of the Code. The organization engages in a number of different educational and charitable activities. As one of its activities, the organization maintains an office that monitors and reports on legislative, judicial, administrative, and other governmental activities and developments considered to be of important social interest. As part of the office's activities, it distributes a monthly newsletter to interested members and others, who together number only a few thousand nationwide.

The monthly newsletter contains expressions of the organization's views on a broad range of legislative, judicial, and administrative issues it considers significant. In discussing a particular issue, the reader is sometimes encouraged to contact various governmental officials to express his or her views on the issue.

As soon as practical after the close of each congressional session, the organization intends to publish in an issue of its newsletter a summary of the voting records of all incumbent Members of Congress on selected legislative issues important to it, together with an expression of the organization's position on those issues. Each member's votes will be reported in a way which illustrates whether he or she voted in accordance with the organization's position on the issue. The newsletter is politically non-partisan, and will not contain any reference to or mention of any political campaigns, elections, candidates, or any statements expressly or impliedly endorsing or rejecting any incumbent as a candidate for public office. No mention will be made of an individual's overall qualification for public office, nor will there be any comparison of candidates that might be competing with the incumbents in any political campaign. The voting records of all incumbents will be presented and candidates for reelection will not be identified. The newsletter will point out the limitations of judging the qualifications of an incumbent on the basis of a few selected votes and will note the need to consider such unrecorded matters as performance on subcommittees and constituent service.

Publication usually will occur after congressional adjournment and will not be geared to the timing of any federal election. The newsletter will be distributed to the usual subscribers, and will not be targeted toward particular areas in which elections are occurring.

LAW

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes, no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation, and which do not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(c)(3)(i) of the Income Tax Regulations states that an organization is not operated exclusively for one or more exempt purposes if it is an "action" organization. Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(c)(3)(iii) defines an "action" organization as an organization that participates or intervenes, directly or indirectly, in any political campaign on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office. The regulations further provide that activities that constitute participation or intervention in a political campaign on behalf of or in opposition to a candidate include, but are not limited to, the publication or distribution of written statements or the making of oral statements on behalf of or in opposition to such a candidate.

Whether an organization is participating or intervening, directly or indirectly, in any political campaign on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office depends upon all of the facts and circumstances of each case. Certain "voter education" activities conducted in a non-partisan manner may not constitute prohibited political activities under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. Other so-called "voter education" activities, however, may be proscribed by the statute. Rev. Rul. 78-248, 1978-1 C.B. 154, sets forth several situations illustrating when an organization has or has not engaged in prohibited political activities within the meaning of section 501(c)(3).

In Situation 3 of Rev. Rul. 78-248, the organization prepared a questionnaire to all candidates for major public offices that contained questions evidencing a bias on certain issues and made the responses generally available to the public during an election campaign. It was considered to be participating in prohibited political campaign activity. In Situation 4 of Rev. Rul. 78-248, an organization primarily concerned with land conservation matters published a compilation of incumbents' voting records on selected land conservation issues and widely distributed it to the electorate during an election campaign. It was held that by concentrating on a narrow range of issues and widely distributing the publication among the electorate during an election campaign, the organization was participating in a prohibited political activity.

In this case the format and content of the publication are not neutral, since the organization reports each incumbent's votes and its own views on selected legislative issues and indicates whether the incumbent supported or opposed the organization's view. On the other hand, the voting records of all incumbents will be presented, candidates for reelection will not be identified, no comment will be made on an individual's overall qualifications for public office, no statements expressly or impliedly endorsing or rejecting any incumbent as a candidate for public office will be offered, no comparison of incumbents with other candidates will be made, and the organization will point out the inherent limitations of judging the qualifications of an incumbent on the basis of certain selected votes by stating the need to consider such unrecorded matters as performance on subcommittees and constituent service.

In view of the foregoing, other factors must be examined to determine whether in the final analysis the organization is participating or intervening in a political campaign.

In the instant case, the organization will not widely distribute its compilation of incumbents' voting records.

The publication will be distributed to the organization's normal readership who number only a few thousand nationwide. This will result in a very small distribution in any particular state or congressional district. No attempt will be made to target the publication toward particular areas in which elections are occurring nor to time the date of publication to coincide with an election campaign.

In view of these facts, Situations 3 and 4 of Rev. Rul. 78-248 are distinguishable from the present case, and the organization will not be considered to be engaged in prohibited political campaign activity.

HOLDING

The publication of a newsletter, by an organization otherwise described in section 501(c)(3) of the Code, containing the voting records of Congressional incumbents on selected issues, in the manner described above, will not constitute participation or intervention in any poltical campaign within the meaning of section 501(c)(3).

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 78-248 is amplified.

Section 503.—Requirements for Exemption

26 CFR 1.503(b)-1: Prohibited transactions.

Prohibited transaction; loan to employer-grantor; inadequate security. A qualified employees' trust made a loan to the employer-grantor and received in return a demand note bearing a reasonable rate of interest together with a chattel mortgage on personal property then or in the future owned by the grantor. The property was not identified and the mortgage was not recorded as soon as practicable. The loan was not adequately secured and constitutes a prohibited transaction within the meaning of section 503(b)(1) of the Code. Rev. Rul. 66-324 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-269

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate, under current law, the position in Rev. Rul. 66-324, 1966-2 C.B. 230.

The issue in Rev. Rul. 66-234 is whether a loan made by an employees' trust, under the circumstances described below, constitutes a prohibited transaction within the meaning of section 503 of the Internal Revenue Code.

An employees' trust meeting the requirements of section 401(a) of the Code and exempt from federal income tax under section 501(a) was established as part of a plan referred to in section 4975(g)(3).

The trustee of the qualified employees' trust made a loan to the employer-grantor and received in return a demand note bearing a reasonable rate of interest together with a chattel mortgage on personal property then or in the future owned by the grantor. The personal property was to have a fair market value at least equal to the amount of the loan. No identification was given of the property, and the mortgage was not recorded with the county clerk until approximately 18 months after the loan was made. Immediately after the making of this loan, the aggregate amount loaned by the trust to the employer exceeded 25 percent of the value of all assets of the trust.

Section 503(a)(1)(B) of the Code states that an organization described in section 401(a) which is referred to in section 4975(g)(2) or (3) shall not be exempt from taxation under section 501(a) if it has engaged in a prohibited transaction after March 1, 1954.

Section 503(b)(1) of the Code provides that, for purposes of that section, the term "prohibited transaction" means any transaction in which an organization subject to the provisions of that section lends any part of its income or corpus, without the receipt of adequate security and a reasonable rate of interest, to the creator of such organization (if a trust). In this case, the creator of the section 401(a) organization was the employer.

Section 1.503(b)-1(b)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations defines the term "adequate security" to mean something in addition to and supporting a promise to pay, which is so pledged to the organization that it may be sold, foreclosed upon, or otherwise disposed of in default of repayment of the loan, the value and liquidity of which security is such that it may reasonably be anticipated that loss of principal or interest will not result from the loan.

Section 503(f) of the Code provides that section 503(b)(1) shall not apply to a loan made to the employer by an employees' trust described in section 401(a) if the loan bears a reasonable rate of interest and certain conditions are met. One such condition is that immediately after the making of the loan, the aggregate amount lent by the trust to the employer, without the receipt of adequate security, must not exceed 25 percent of the value of all assets of the trust.

The provisions of local law in the employer's jurisdiction stipulate that a mortagage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor, subsequent purchasers, and encumbrancers of the property, for value, unless filed in the office of the county clerk where the property mortgaged is situated. Thus, a chattel mortgage, until filed, is enforceable only between the parties, and the rights of intervening third parties without knowledge of the unrecorded mortgage may weaken the value of such security.

In view of the foregoing circumstances it is necessary, in order to satisfy the requirements of the regulations, that the chattel mortgage be recorded as soon as practicable, and the personal property be specifically identifiable.

The chattel mortgage was not recorded as soon as practicable, and the personal property was not specifically identifiable. Therefore, the loan was not adequately secured and the circumstances of the loan made it ineligible for the exception provisions of section 503(f) of the Code.

Accordingly, the loan constitutes a prohibited transaction within the meaning of section 503(b)(1) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 66-324 is superseded because the position stated therein is updated and restated in this revenue ruling.

Section 585.—Reserves for Losses on Loans of Banks

(Also Section 351; 1.351-1.)

Banks; bad debt reserves; additions; section 351 transfer of loans. A bank that transferred a portion of its loans outstanding to another bank in a transaction qualifying under section 351 of the Code must consider the transferred loans as a reduction in eligible loans outstanding at the beginning of the year of transfer in calculating the maximum addition to its reserve for losses on loans at the end of the taxable year of transfer under section 585(b)(2)(A).

Rev. Rul. 80-270

ISSUE

What adjustment must be made by a transferor bank to the amount of its eligible loans outstanding for purposes of computing the maximum addition to the reserve for bad debts under section 585(b)(2)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code for a taxable year in which a section 351 transfer of loans outstanding has occurred?

FACTS

On April 1, 1978, Y, a commercial bank that uses the accrual method of accounting, transferred a portion of its loans outstanding ($100x$ dollars) to Z (also a commercial bank) in exchange for stock of Z in a tax free transfer qualifying under section 351 of the Code. Y also reduced its related reserve for losses on these loans ($5x$ dollars). Thus, pursuant to section 358, Y's basis in the stock received is equal to the face amount of the loans transferred to Z less the reserve relating to the loans transferred ($100x - 5x = 95x$). Y accomplished the reduction in the reserve for losses on loans by reducing its initial reserve for losses for the taxable year by an amount equal to the amount of the reserve transferred ($5x$ dollars). Z established a reserve for losses on loans in the amount of $5x$ dollars with respect to the loans it received. This amount was not considered as an addition to the reserve for losses on loans by Z for the taxable year 1978, or for any taxable year thereafter.

Y and Z compute their reserves for losses on loans under section 585 of the Code and the regulations thereunder. Y and Z used the "percentage method" for computing the maximum reasonable reserve addition for 1978, as set forth in section 585(b)(2)(A) and section 1.585-2(b)(1)(ii) of the Income Tax Regulations. In addition, Y has consistently taken the maximum addition allowable in computing all prior additions to its reserve for losses on loans.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

In Nash v. United States, 398 U.S. 1 (1970), Ct. D. 1941, 1970-1 C.B. 72, the Supreme Court held that a reserve for bad debts is not includible in income when accounts receivable are transferred to a controlled corporation in exchange for securities equal in value to the accounts receivable less the bad debt reserve. As a result of the Nash decision, Rev. Rul. 78-280, 1978-2 C.B. 139, sets forth the method for determining the transferor's basis in the accounts receivable. An accrual basis transferor using the reserve method must reduce the basis of the transferred accounts receivable and the amount of the reserve. However, Rev. Rul. 78-280 does not describe the method by which a transferor bank computes its maximum addition to its reserve under section 585 of the Code.

Section 585 of the Code sets forth the rules for calculating the reasonable reserve addition for a bank, as defined in section 581. Section 585(b)(2) describes the "percentage method" of calculating the reasonable reserve addition. Pursuant to this method, the proper amount necessary to increase the balance of the reserve is the amount necessary to increase the balance of the reserve for losses on loans (at the close of the taxable year) to the allowable percentage of eligible loans outstanding at such time. For 1978 the allowable percentage was 1.2 percent, pursuant to section 585(b).

Section 1.585-2(b)(1)(ii)(A) of the regulations sets forth the manner for determining the amount of the maximum reasonable addition to the reserve for losses on loans under the "percentage method" for a taxable year when a bank's reserve for losses on loans at the close of its base year, as defined in section 585(b)(2), is less than the allowable percentage for the taxable year (here 1.2 percent) multiplied by the eligible loans outstanding at the close of the base year. One factor making up the annual reserve addition is "an amount attributable to an increase in the amounts of eligible loans outstanding." Section 1.585-2(b)(1)(ii)(A)(3).

The purpose of section 585 of the Code is to allow an addition to the reserve for bad debts for the increase in eligible loans at the end of the taxable year. In the instant case, Y may transfer the accounts receivable ($100x$ dollars) and reduce its reserve ($5x$ dollars), and Z may set up outstanding loans ($100x$ dollars) and set up a reserve for losses ($5x$ dollars). When the reserves of Y and Z are considered together the proper tax result is obtained for this transaction. However, for Y to compute its maximum addition to the reserve under section 1.585-2(b)(1)(ii) of the regulations correctly at the end of the year in which these loans were transferred, it must reduce the amount of loans outstanding at the beginning of the year by the amount of such loans transferred in the section 351 transfer in order to make the proper computation under section 1.585-2(b)(1)(ii)(A).

HOLDING

A transferor bank must consider as a reduction in eligible loans outstanding at the beginning of the year of transfer, that portion of the bank's loans transferred in a section 351 transaction in calculating the maximum addition to the reserve for losses on loans at the end of the taxable year of transfer for purposes of section 585(b)(2)(A) of the Code and section 1.585-2(b)(1)(ii)(A) of the regulations.

Withholding on certain crewmen engaged in fishing

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final Regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to the treatment of certain crewmen on boats engaged in catching fish as self-employed rather than as employees. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] and the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1]. These regulations provide operators and crewmen of fishing boats with guidance necessary for compliance with the Acts.

DATES: The amendments to the regulations relating to income tax withholding and self-employment taxes are effective for taxable years ending after December 31, 1954. The amendments to the regulations relating to social security taxes are effective with respect to services performed after December 31, 1954, except for services performed after December 31, 1954, but before October 4, 1976, in cases in which the owner or operator of a boat treated a share of the boat's catch as being subject to such taxes. The amendments to the regulations relating to reporting requirements are effective for calendar years beginning after October 4, 1976.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On April 9, 1980, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1), the Employment Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 31), and the Regulations on Procedure and Administration (26 CFR Part 301) under sections 1402, 3121, 3401, and 6050A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. These amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 1207(e) and (f)(4) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1706) [supra, at 182, 184], as amended by section 701(z) of the Revenue Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 2921) [supra, at 155]. No public hearing was requested. After consideration of comments regarding the proposed amendments, those amendments are adopted by this Treasury decision as proposed.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

Under the Tax Reform Act of 1976, as amended, if certain conditions are met, after 1954 crewmen on boats engaged in catching fish and other aquatic animals are generally considered self-employed, rather than employees, for purposes of income tax withholding, self-employment tax, and the social security laws.

In order for a crewman to be considered self-employed, all of the following conditions must be met:

(1) The crew member must receive in payment for his services a fixed share of the boat's catch or of the proceeds from the sale of the catch and he must be entitled to no other cash or property independent of the size of the catch;

(2) The amount of the crew member's share must depend solely on the amount of the boat's catch, and therefore the amount of the share cannot be fixed at any minimum (in dollars or weight); and

(3) The crew of the boat on which the individual performed these services must normally be made up of fewer than 10 individuals.

Even if the criteria under the new provision are satisfied, for purposes of the social security tax a crewman is nevertheless deemed an employee, with regard to any services performed after December 31, 1954, but before October 4, 1976, if the boat operator treated a share of the boat's catch received by the crewman as subject to social security taxes.

If the new criteria are satisfied, the boat operator must file an information return on Form 1099-F (Copy A) by February 28 of the calendar year following the year in which service is performed, and, if the crewman has made his address known, the operator must furnish Copy B of the same form to the crewman. The operator must report on Form 1099-F the identity of each individual performing services, the individual's percentage share of the catch, and the amount of the proceeds received or the type and weight of the catch each crewman received as compensation for his services.

The regulation explicitly states that a crewman's share is not dependent solely on the amount of the boat's catch if the crewman is entitled under any individual or collective agreement to any fee, hourly wage, minimum for services, or any other amount unrelated to the size of the catch. Further, the operating crew includes the captain for purposes of determining the number of persons who normally make up the crew of the boat.

Two comments made with respect to the proposed rules expressed some confusion as to whether the same individual could be considered self-employed for one voyage and an employee for the next voyage as a result of how remuneration for the crewman was calculated. The regulation clearly provides that services performed by a crewman on one voyage may be excepted from employment but may not be so excepted on a subsequent voyage on the same or on a different boat, and that services of some crewman on a voyage may be excepted from employment while services of other crewmen on the same voyage may not be so excepted. For example, a crewman on a 5-man crab fishing boat, if paid solely on a share basis, might be considered self-employed for that trip, but the same crewman on a subsequent salmon tendering trip, if compensated on a per-diem basis, would be considered an employee.

The regulation specifies certain events which result in a boat operator's "treating" a share of the boat's catch as subject to social security taxes for purposes of the exception to the 1955 effective date in the case of such taxes. For example, the operator is generally deemed to have treated the share of the catch as subject to social security taxes (1) if the operator voluntarily filed Form 941, (2) if he made full or partial payment of FICA tax (unless he made such payment only in order to file a court claim for a refund), or (3) if the operator withheld FICA tax from the crewman's share (regardless of whether the tax was paid over to the Service).

The regulation makes clear that, if a share of the catch has been "treated" as subject to social security taxes, in the case of services performed after December 31, 1954, but before October 4, 1976, even though the crewman otherwise satisfied the criteria necessary for being considered self-employed, he is not required to pay tax on self-employment income with respect to such services, but is required to pay income tax on income received for such services. The fact that a boat operator has treated a share of the catch as being subject to the social security tax does not mean that the operator is required to withhold income tax with respect to that share. However, in such cases the boat operator is required to pay over both the employee and employer portions of FICA tax.

The final regulations adopted by this Treasury decision impose no significant new reporting or recordkeeping requirements. The principal effect of the final regulations is to conform existing regulations to statutory changes. Evaluation of the effectiveness of these regulations after issuance will be based upon comments received from offices within Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service, other governmental agencies, and the public.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Claudine Ausness of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to 26 CFR Parts 1, 31, and 301 are hereby adopted:

INCOME TAX REGULATIONS
(26 CFR Part 1)

Paragraph 1. Section 1.1402(c)-3 is amended by revising the second sentence of paragraph (a) and by adding a new paragraph (g) to read as follows:

§ 1.1402(c)-3 Employees.

(a) General rule. * * * However, in six cases set forth in paragraphs (b) to (g), inclusive, of this section, the performance of service by an individual is considered to constitute a trade or business within the meaning of section 1402(c) and § 1.1402(c)-1. * * *

* * * * *

(g) Individuals engaged in fishing. For taxable years ending after December 31, 1954, service performed by an individual on a boat engaged in catching fish or other forms of aquatic animal life (hereinafter "fish") constitutes a trade or business within the meaning of section 1402(c) and § 1.1402(c)-1 if the service is excepted from the definition of employment by section 3121(b)(20) and § 31.3121(b)(20)-1(a). However, the preceding sentence does not apply to services performed after December 31, 1954, and before October 4, 1976, on a boat engaged in catching fish if the owner or operator of the boat treated the individual as an employee in the manner described in § 31.3121(b)(20)-1(b).

Par. 2. Section 1.6050A-1 is added immediately after § 1.6050-1, to read as follows:

§ 1.6050A-1 Reporting requirements of certain fishing boat operators.

(a) Requirement of reporting. The operator of a boat on which one or more individuals during a calendar year performed services described in § 31.3121(b)(20)-1(a) shall make an information return on Form 1099-F for that calendar year. The return shall include the following information:

(1) The name and taxpayer identification number of each individual performing the services;

(2) The percentage of each individual's share of the catch of fish or other forms of aquatic life (hereinafter "fish");

(3) The percentage of the operator's share of the catch of fish;

(4) If the individual receives all or part of his share of the catch in kind, the type and weight of the share and, if it can be ascertained, the fair market value of his share;

(5) If the individual receives a share of the proceeds of the catch, the dollar amount received; and

(6) Any other information that is required by the form.

For purposes of this section, the term "boat operator" means an employer (as defined in § 31.3121(d)-(2)) of an employee whose services are excepted from employment by section 3121(b)(20) and § 31.3121(b)(20)-1. The boat operator may make separate returns on Form 1099-F for each crew member for each voyage, or he may aggregate the information required by this paragraph for an individual for all or any part of a return period in which the type of catch (if required) and the percentage due the crew member remain the same.

(b) Time and place for filing. Returns required to be made under this section on Form 1099-F shall be filed with the Internal Revenue Service Center, designated in the instructions for Form 1099-F, on or before February 28 of the year following the year in which the relevant services were performed.

(c) Requirement of and time for furnishing statement—(1) Requirement of furnishing statement. Every person filing a Form 1099-F under this section shall furnish to the individual whose identifying number is (or should be) shown on the form a written statement showing the information required by paragraph (a) of this section. The requirement of the preceding sentence may be met by furnishing to the individual copy B of Form 1099-F or a reasonable facsimile of Form 1099-F that was filed pursuant to this section.

(2) Time for furnishing statement. Each statement required by this paragraph to be furnished to any individual for a calendar year shall be furnished on or before January 31 of the year following the calendar year for which the return was made.

EMPLOYMENT TAX REGULATIONS

(26 CFR Part 31)

Par. 3. Section 31.3121(b)(20)-1 is added immediately after § 31.3121(b)(19)-1, to read as follows:

§ 31.3121(b)(20)-1 Service performed on a boat engaged in catching fish.

(a) In general. (1) Service performed on or after December 31, 1954, by an individual on a boat engaged in catching fish or other forms of aquatic animal life (hereinafter "fish") are excepted from employment if—

(i) The individual receives a share of the boat's (or boats' for a fishing operation involving more than one boat) catch of fish or a share of the proceeds from the sale of the catch,

(ii) The amount of the individual's share depends solely on the amount of the boat's (or boats' for a fishing operation involving more than one boat) catch of fish,

(iii) The individual does not receive, and is not entitled to receive, any cash remuneration, other than remuneration that is described in subdivision (i) of this subparagraph, and

(iv) The crew of the boat (or of each boat from which the individual receives a share of the catch) normally is made up of fewer than 10 individuals.

(2) The requirement of subdivision (ii) of subparagraph (1) is not satisfied if there exists an agreement with the boat's (or boats') owner or operator by which the individual's remuneration is determined partially or fully by a factor not dependent on the size of the catch. For example, if a boat is operated under a remuneration arrangement, e.g., a collective agreement which specifies that crew members, in addition to receiving a share of the catch, are entitled to an hourly wage for repairing nets, regardless of whether this wage is actually paid, then all the crew members covered by the arrangement are entitled to receive cash remuneration other than a share of the catch and their services are not excepted from employment by section 3121(b)(20).

(3) The operating crew of a boat includes all persons on the boat (including the captain) who receive any form of remuneration in exchange for services rendered while on a boat engaged in catching fish. See § 1.6050A-1 for reporting requirements for the operator of a boat engaged in catching fish with respect to individuals performing services described in this section.

(4) During the same return period, service performed by a crew member may be excepted from employment by section 3121(b)(20) and this section for one voyage and not so excepted on a subsequent voyage on the same or on a different boat.

(5) During the same voyage, service performed by one crew member may be excepted from employment by section 3121(b)(20) and this section but service performed by another crew member may not be so excepted.

(b) Special rule. Services performed after December 31, 1954, and before October 4, 1976, on a boat by an individual engaged in catching fish are not excepted from employment for any voyage (for purposes of section 3121(b) and the corresponding regulations), even though the individual satisfies the requirements of subdivisions (i) through (iv) of paragraph (a)(1) of this section, if the owner or operator of the boat engaged in catching fish treated the individual as an employee. For purposes of this subparagraph, the individual was treated as an employee if—

(1) Form 941 was voluntarily filed by the boat operator or owner, regardless of whether the tax imposed by chapter 21 was withheld. For purposes of this subdivision, the filing of Form 941 is not voluntary if the filing was the result of action taken by the Service pursuant to section 6651(a) (relating to addition to the tax for failure to file tax return or to pay tax);

(2) The boat owner or operator withheld from the individual's share the tax imposed by chapter 21, regardless of whether the tax was paid over to the Service; or

(3) The boat owner or operator made full or partial payment of the tax imposed by chapter 21, unless the payment was made pursuant to section 7422(a) (relating to no civil actions for refund prior to filing claim for refund).

However, for purposes of this paragraph, crew members whose services, but for subdivisions (i) through (iii), would have been excepted from employment by section 3121(b)(20) are not required to pay self-employment tax on income earned in performing those services. See § 1.1402(c)-3(g). Moreover, in such cases the employer is not entitled to a refund of the employer's share of any tax imposed by chapter 21 that was paid.

Par. 4. Section 31.3401(a)(17)-1 is added after § 31.3401(a)(16)-1, to read as follows:

§ 31.3401(a)(17)-1 Remuneration for services performed on a boat engaged in catching fish.

(a) Remuneration for services performed on or after December 31, 1954, by an individual on a boat engaged in catching fish or other forms of aquatic animal life (hereinafter "fish") is excepted from wages and hence is not subject to withholding if—

(1) The individual receives a share of the boat's (or boats' for a fishing operation involving more than one boat) catch of fish or a share of the proceeds from the sale of the catch,

(2) The amount of the individual's share depends solely on the amount of the boat's (or boats' for a fishing operation involving more than one boat) catch of fish,

(3) The individual does not receive, and is not entitled to receive, any cash remuneration, other than remuneration that is described in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph, and

(4) The crew of the boat (or of each boat from which the individual receives a share of the catch) normally is made up of fewer than 10 individuals.

(b) The requirement of subparagraph (2) of paragraph (a) is not satisfied if there exists an agreement with the boat's (or boats') owner or operator by which the individual's remuneration is determined partially or fully by a factor not dependent on the size of the catch. For example, if a boat is operated under a remuneration arrangement, e.g., a union contract, which specifies that crew members, in addition to receiving a share of the catch, are entitled to an hourly wage for repairing nets, regardless of whether this wage is actually paid, then all the crew members covered by the arrangement are entitled to receive cash remuneration other than as a share of the catch and are not excepted from employment by section 3121(b)(20).

(c) The operating crew of a boat includes all persons on the boat (including the captain) who receive any form of remuneration in exchange for services rendered while on a boat engaged in catching fish. See § 1.6050A-1 for reporting requirements for the operator of a boat engaged in catching fish with respect to individuals performing services described in this section.

(d) During the same return period, service performed by a crew member may be excepted from employment by section 3121(b)(20) and this section for one voyage and not so excepted on a subsequent voyage on the same or on a different boat.

REGULATIONS ON PROCEDURE AND ADMINISTRATION

(26 CFR Part 301)

Par. 5. Section 301.6050A-1 is added immediately after § 301.6050-1, to read as follows:

§ 301.6050A-1 Information returns regarding services performed by certain crewmen on fishing boats.

For provisions relating to the requirement of returns of information regarding services performed by certain crewmen on fishing boats, see § 1.6050A-1 of this chapter (Income Tax Regulations) and § 301.6652-1 of this chapter (Regulations on Procedure and Administration).

Par. 6. Section 301.6652-1(a)(2) is amended to read as follows:

§ 301.6652-1 Failure to file certain information returns.

(a) Returns with respect to payments made in calendar years after 1962. * * *

(2) Other payments; statements with respect to tips. In the case of each failure—

(i) To file a statement of a payment made to another person required under authority of section 6041, relating to information returns with respect to certain information at source, or section 6051(d), relating to information returns with respect to payments of wages as defined in section 3401(a), or section 6050A(a), relating to information returns with respect to remuneration of certain crew members defined in section 3121(b)(20), or

(ii) To furnish a statement required under authority of section 6053(b), relating to statements furnished by employers with respect to tips, or section 6050A(b), relating to statements furnished by fishing boat operators with respect to remuneration of certain crew members, within the time prescribed by regulations under those sections for filing such statements (determined with regard to any extension of time for filing), there shall be paid by the person failing to so file the statement $1 for each such statement not so filed. However, the total amount imposed on the delinquent person for all such failures during any calendar year shall not exceed $1,000.

Section 2522.—Charitable and Similar Gifts

26 CFR 25.2522(c)-2: Disallowance of charitable, etc., deductions in the case of gifts made after December 31, 1969.

Charitable deduction; transfer in trust; trustee's power to borrow from trust. A settlor's transfer of money to a charitable trust that is a private foundation described in section 509(a) of the Code does not qualify for a gift tax charitable deduction if the trustee, an adult child of the settlor, may borrow money from the trust.

Rev. Rul. 80-271

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, does the settlor's transfer to a charitable trust qualify for the gift tax charitable deduction under section 2522(a) of the Code if the trustee, a member of the settlor's family, may borrow funds from the trust?

FACTS

On December 1, 1978, G, the settlor, transferred 10*x* dollars to be held in trust by G's adult child, A, as trustee. The trust is a private foundation within the meaning of section 509(a).

The trust instrument provides that income is to be paid anually to X Charity for 25 years. At the end of the 25 year period, the principal is to be distributed to X Charity. During the trust term, A may borrow a maximum of 2*x* dollars from the trust. The borrowed money is to be repaid, along with interest at the prevailing rate, upon the termination of the trust, if not previously repaid.

Under applicable local law the right of an individual to borrow money from a trust is not regarded as a beneficial interest in the trust since the borrowed funds must be repaid to the trust. In addition, the trustee is not prevented from exercising a power to borrow trust money.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2511(a) of the Code provides that the gift tax applies whether the transfer is in trust or otherwise, whether the gift is direct or indirect, and whether the property is real or personal, tangible or intangible.

Section 2522(a) of the Code allows a federal gift tax deduction for transfers to or for the use of a charitable organization. Section 2522(c), however, provides that certain charitable transfers will not qualify for a deduction under section 2522(a).

Under section 2522(c)(1), no deduction is allowed for a gift to an organization or trust described in section 508(d). Section 508(d) describes, among other things, a private foundation that fails to meet the requirements of section 508(e). Under section 508(e), a private foundation is not exempt from taxation unless its governing instrument prohibits the foundation from engaging in, among others, any act of self-dealing, which includes the lending of money or other extension of credit by a trust to a trustee or to a member of the family of a substantial contributor to the trust. See sections 4941(d)(1)(B) and 4946(a)(1). Consequently, under section 2522(c)(1), a transfer to a trust from which a trustee or a member of the settlor's family may borrow money will not qualify for a federal gift tax deduction allowed by section 2522(a), notwithstanding that all of the interests are transferred for the benefit of a charity.

In the present situation, since the trust instrument authorizes an act of self-dealing, the trust fails to meet the requirements of section 508(e). Therefore, it is a trust described in section 508(d).

HOLDING

Since A can borrow funds from the trust, the trust is described in section 508(d) and, therefore, does not satisfy the requirements of section 2522(c)(1). Consequently, G's transfer does not qualify for a gift tax charitable deduction under section 2522(a).

Rul. 87 modified.

Rev. Rul. 80-273

FACTS

The Internal Revenue Service has established a new basis for computing the manufacturers excise tax on the sale at retail of automotive parts or accessories, fishing equipment, bows and arrows, and firearms in situations where the manufacturers, producers, or importers do not sell like articles to wholesale distributors.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Sections 4061(b)(1), 4161(a), 4161(b), and 4181 of the Internal Revenue Code impose manufacturers excise taxes on the sale of automotive parts or accessories, fishing equipment, bows and arrows, and firearms, respectively.

Section 4216(a) of the Code relates to the allowance of certain adjustments to the sale price for purposes of computing manufacturers excise tax liability.

Section 4216(b)(1)(A) of the Code provides that if an article is sold at retail, the manufacturers excise tax shall (if based on the price for which the article is sold) be computed on whichever of the following prices is the lower: (i) the price for which such article is sold, or (ii) the highest price for which such articles are sold to wholesale distributors, in the ordinary course of trade, by manufacturers or producers thereof, as determined by the Secretary.

Section 48.4216(b)-2(b) of the Manufacturers and Retailers Excise Tax Regulations provides that in determining the highest price for which articles are sold by manufacturers to wholesale distributors (the constructive sale price) there must be taken into consideration the normal industry practices with respect to section 4216 (a) inclusions and exclusions. However, once a constructive sale price has been determined by the Secretary, no further adjustment of such price shall be made.

Rev. Ruls. 79-32 and 79-33, 1979-1 C.B. 355 and 356, provide that the basis for computing manufacturers excise tax where truck trailer and semitrailer chassis and bodies, and truck chassis and bodies and truck-tractors, respectively, are sold at retail is 90 percent of the actual selling price after taking into account the adjustments provided by section 4216 (a) of the Code unless it can be shown that a lower percentage should apply to a particular segment of the industry. Under section 4216(b)(1)(A), the manufacturer's cost is no longer a factor with respect to articles taxable under section 4061(a).

HOLDING

The constructive sale price for computing the taxes imposed by sections 4061(b)(1), 4161(a), 4161(b), and 4181 of the Code, where the articles are sold at retail by manufacturers, producers, or importers who do not sell like articles to wholesale distributors, is 75 percent of the actual selling price after taking into account the adjustments provided by section 4216 (a) unless it can be shown on an industry-wide basis that a lower percentage should apply. No further adjustments under section 4216 are allowable. The manufacturer's cost is not to be a factor in determining the constructive sale price.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 87, 1953-1 C.B. 464, which holds that certain custom-made racks for delivery trucks are taxable automotive parts or accessories, is modified to indicate that the constructive sale price for such articles sold only at retail is 75 percent of the actual selling price after taking into account the allowable adjustments.

PROSPECTIVE APPLICATION

Under the authority granted by section 7805(b) of the Code, this revenue ruling is effective with respect to sales of the aforementioned articles by manufacturers, producers, and importers on and after January 1, 1981.

Section 4997.—Records and Information; Regulations

26 CFR 150.4997-1: Returns and recordkeeping.

Windfall profit tax; recordkeeping requirements; ADP users. Punched cards, magnetic tapes, disks, and other machine-sensible data media used for recordkeeping in a taxpayer's automatic data processing system are records within the meaning of section 4997 of the Code and must be retained so long as the contents may become material in the administration of any internal revenue law. However, punched cards used merely as a means of input to the system need not be retained if the input information is duplicated on other records.

Rev. Rul. 80-272 [1]

ISSUE

Do punched cards, magnetic tapes, disks, and other machine-sensible data media used in the automatic data processing of accounting transactions constitute records within the meaning of section 4997 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

In the typical situation the taxpayer maintains records within his automatic data processing (ADP) system. Daily transactions are recorded on punched cards and processed by the taxpayer's computer, which prints daily listings and accumulates the individual transaction records for a month's business on magnetic tapes. At the month's end the tapes are used to print out monthly journals, registers, and subsidiary ledgers and to prepare account summary totals entered on punch cards. The summary data from these cards is posted to the general ledger, and a monthly printout is generated to reflect opening balances, summary total postings, and closing balances. At the year's end several closing ledger runs are made to record adjusting entries. In other situations taxpayers use punched cards, disks, or other machine-sensible data media to store accounting information.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4986(a) of the Code imposes an excise tax on the windfall profit from taxable crude oil removed from the premises during each taxable period. Section 4986(b) provides that this tax shall be paid by the producer of the crude oil.

Section 4997 of the Code provides that each taxpayer liable for tax under section 4986, each partnership, trust, or estate producing domestic crude oil, each purchaser of domestic crude oil, and each operator of a well from which domestic crude oil was produced, shall keep such records, make such returns and furnish such information with respect to such oil as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe.

Under section 150.4997-1(b) of the Temporary Excise Tax Regulations under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, each of the parties described in section 4997 of the Code shall keep records of all documents, material, and information necessary to the determination of the windfall profit tax or that affect his or her administrative obligations under the Act or regulations, including material furnished to other persons, as well as information received from other persons. The records shall be kept at all times available for inspection by authorized internal revenue officers or employees and shall be retained so long as the contents thereof may become material in the administration of any internal revenue law.

HOLDING

Punched cards, magnetic tapes, disks, and other machine-sensible data media used for recording, consolidating, and summarizing accounting transactions and records within a taxpayer's automatic data processing system are records within the meaning of section 4997 of the Code and section 150.4997-1(b) of the regulations and are required to be retained so long as the contents may become material in the administration of any internal revenue law. However, where punched cards are used merely as a means of input to the system and the information is duplicated on magnetic tapes, disks, or other machine-sensible records, such punched cards need not be retained.

It is recognized that ADP accounting systems will vary from taxpayer to taxpayer and, usually, will be designed to fit the specific needs of the taxpayer. Accordingly, taxpayers who are in doubt as to which records are to be retained or who desire further information should contact their district director for assistance.

See Rev. Proc. 80-42, page 18, this Bulletin, which sets forth guidelines for keeping records with an ADP system.

Rev. Proc. 80-42 [1]

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

.01 The purpose of this revenue procedure is to set forth guidelines specifying the basic record requirements that the Internal Revenue Service considers to be essential in cases where a taxpayer's records are maintained within an automatic data processing (ADP) system. References here to ADP systems include all accounting systems which process all or part of a taxpayer's transactions, records, or data by other than manual methods.

.02 The technology of ADP is evolving rapidly; new methods and techniques are constantly being devised and adopted. Accordingly, the five points set forth in section 4 of this revenue procedure are not intended to restrict or prevent taxpayers from obtaining the maximum benefits of ADP provided the appropriate information is present or can be produced by the system. These guidelines will be modified and admended as the need indicates to keep pace with developments in ADP.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

The inherent nature of ADP is such that it may not be possible to trace transactions from source documents to end results or to reconstruct a given account unless the system is designed to provide audit trails. Taxpayers already using ADP or contemplating its use have requested information concerning the types of records that should be developed and maintained in order to meet the requirements of section 4997 of the Internal Revenue Code and the corresponding regulations. This section of the Code reads in part as follows:

> Each taxpayer liable for the windfall profit tax, each partnership, trust, or estate producing domestic crude oil, each purchaser of domestic crude oil, and each operator of a well from which domestic crude oil was produced shall keep such records, make such returns, and furnish such information with respect to such oil as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe.

SEC. 3. OBJECTIVES

Modern machine accounting systems are capable of recording business transactions much more rapidly and with greater accuracy than manual systems, and they are capable of retaining and producing vast amounts of data. The ability to produce in legible form the data necessary to determine, at a later date, whether or not the correct tax liability has been reported must be carefully considered in designing and programming a machine system. This factor may add to the complexity of the system and require additional cost, but this cost may be negligible in comparision to the expense that may be incurred at a later date if the system cannot practically and readily provide the information needed to support and substantiate the accuracy of the previously reported tax liability.

SEC. 4. ADP RECORD GUIDELINES

.01 ADP accounting systems will vary, just as manual systems vary, from taxpayer to taxpayer. However, the procedures built into a computer's accounting program must include a method of producing from the punched cards or tapes visible and legible records which will provide the necessary information for the verification of the taxpayer's tax liability.

.02 In determining the adequacy of records maintained with an ADP system, the Service will consider as acceptable those systems that comply with the guidelines for record requirements as follows:

1 General and subsidiary books of account. A general ledger, with source references, should be written out to coincide with financial reports for tax reporting periods. In cases where subsidiary ledgers are used to support the general ledger accounts, the subsidiary ledgers should also be written out periodically.

2 Supporting documents and audit trail. The audit trail should be designed so that the details underlying the summary accounting data, such as invoices and vouchers, may be identified and made available to the Service upon request.

3 Recorded or reconstructible data. The records must provide the opportunity to trace any transaction back to the original source or forward to a final total. If printouts are not made of transactions at the time they are processed, then the system must have the ability to reconstruct these transactions.

4 Data storage media. Adequate record retention facilities must be available for storing tapes and printouts as well as all applicable supporting documents. These records must be retained in accordance with the provisions of the Code and the regulations prescribed thereunder.

5 Program documentation. A description of the ADP portion of the accounting system should be available. The statements and illustrations as to the scope of operations should be sufficiently detailed to indicate (a) the application being performed, (b) the procedures employed in each application (which, for example, might be supported by flow charts, block diagrams or other satisfactory descriptions of input or output procedures), and (c) the controls used to insure accurate and reliable processing. Important changes, together with their effective dates, should be noted in order to preserve an accurate chronological record.

SEC. 5. COMMENTS OR INQUIRIES

Comments or inquiries relating to this revenue procedure should be addressed to the Assistant Commissioner (Compliance), Attention: CP:E, Washington, D.C., 20224.

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATE

This revenue procedure is effective October 14, 1980, the date of its publication.

Rev. Proc. 80-43

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

This revenue procedure establishes a handling and shipping charge for processing requests for bulk quantities of tax forms. This charge only applies to those engaged in the preparation of tax returns for private gain.

SEC. 2. CHARGES

.01 Charges for tax forms and instructions will be established on the basis of each 1,000 printed units ordered, or fraction thereof, in excess of the first 500 printed units requested during any 12 month period. The schedule of charges for handling and shipping bulk quantities of tax forms and instructions is:

Up to but not exceeding 500 printed units	No Charge
Each 1,000 units or fraction thereof in excess of the first 500 units	$5.00

A $1.00 discount per 1,000 units will be applied to any bulk order postmarked on or before the discount deadline date published in Publication 1045.

.02 No charge will be made: (a) to an individual or organization for the first 500 printed units requested; (b) to individuals picking up tax forms or instructions at Internal Revenue Service offices; or (c) to a bank, post office or other organization for any quantity of forms and instructions for the convenience and use of the taxpayer, so long as such organization is not engaged in the preparation of tax returns for private gain.

.03 Single copies of Publications 17 and 334 will be provided without charge. Multiple copies of either publication shall not be provided to individuals or organizations except where the Regional Commissioner or District Director determines that such distribution will further the interest of taxpayer service or education. A user charge will apply to all such approved multiple copy requests; however, Regional Commissioners, District Directors and appropriate National Office officials may continue to provide multiple copies without charge for use in Service sponsored programs (e.g. Understanding Taxes and VITA). Priority must be given to filling single copy requests for Publications 17 and 334; requests for bulk quantities of either publication which jeopardize the Service's ability to respond timely to such single copy demand should not be honored. For individuals who wish, for their own purposes, to print bulk quantities of Publications 17 and 334, the Service will provide page negatives of either publication for a user charge. The schedule of charges is:

Publications 17 and 334
$.50 per copy for each approved request
$3.00 per page negative

.04 All user charges will be commensurate with the prevailing postage and handling costs and will be established by the Commissioner.

.05 Publication 1045 will contain Form 2333, Request for Blank Income Tax Forms. The instructions on Form 2333 outline the handling and shipping charge for processing orders of bulk quantities of tax forms.

.06 Checks, made payable to the Internal Revenue Service, should be submitted with Form 2333.

SEC. 3. EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

This revenue procedure supersedes Rev. Proc. 67-36, 1967-2 C.B. 666.

26 CFR 1.6013-6(a)(2)(v) amended.	Relationship of election by nonresident alien to be treated as a resident and income tax treaties.	Sept. 12, 1980	Nov. 11, 1980

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Prices: Domestic—$2.00 a single copy, $55.00 a year subscription; Foreign—$2.50 a single copy, $68.75 a year subscription.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 61.—Gross Income Defined

26 CFR 1.61-1: Gross income.
(Also Section 72; 1.72-1.)

Gross income; interest; wrap-around annuity contracts. Under an agreement between a life insurance company and a federally insured saving and loan association, depositors in the savings and loan association purchase group single premium retirement annuity contracts from the insurer, and the insurer invests the proceeds, less certain expenses, in separate accounts with the savings and loan association until the annuity starting dates. The policyholders, and not the insurer, are the owners of the accounts for federal income tax purposes prior to the annuity starting dates, and the interest earned on the accounts is includible in the policyholders' gross incomes.

Rev. Rul. 80-274 [1]

ISSUE

Is the life insurance company or the depositor the owner for federal income tax purposes of the savings and loan accounts established in accordance with the annuity plans described below?

FACTS

L, a life insurance company taxable under section 802 of the Internal Revenue Code, has developed so-called group single premium retirement annuity contracts ("annuity plans") that have been approved in several states by their respective regulatory departments. The terms "annuity" and "policyholder" as used in this revenue ruling are for descriptive convenience only and are not intended to have any substantive legal significance.

L has entered into agreements with participating federally insured savings and loan associations. Under each agreement, the participating association is designated as the group contract-holder under an annuity plan. L sells annuity contracts under the plan to existing depositors of the participating association and others wishing to establish accounts with the association ("depositors").

Under a plan, a depositor transfers cash, an existing passbook savings and loan account, or certificate of deposit to L in exchange for an annuity contract. The amount paid by the depositor to L is reduced by L from 2 to 5 percent for sales expenses, administrative expenses, and any premium tax imposed on L. This reduced amount is segregated by L and deposited into a separate account of the savings and loan association of the depositor. The amounts deposited are invested in a certificate of deposit for a term designated by the depositor. When the certificate of deposit expires, L is required under the contract to reinvest the proceeds in a certificate of deposit for the same duration unless an investment of the same duration would extend beyond the annuity starting date. In that event, a certificate of deposit with a maturity not extending beyond the annuity starting date will be purchased. If no such certificate of deposit is available, the funds will be invested in a passbook savings account.

At the option of the depositor (referred to in the contract as the "policyholder") additional amounts may be transferred to L that become part of the consideration for the contract.

Pursuant to the agreement between L and the participating savings and loan association, L may not dispose of the deposit, or convert it into a different asset, other than in accordance with the reinvestment provisions described above. L may not use the deposit for any purpose other than to benefit the particular policyholder. This arrangement is intended to afford each policyholder's deposit the maximum federal insurance coverage of $100,000 per account under federal regulations.

L does, however, retain the right to withdraw the deposits from a failing savings and loan association or from an association that terminates the plan. In the event of withdrawal, L must deposit the withdrawn amounts in another federally-insured savings and loan association.

Interest earned on the investments is credited annually to each anuity account by L after payment to L of an annual management fee of one percent of the accumulated value of the account. L guarantees that the deposit will earn interest at 4 percent per year compounded annually from the date of deposit. The current yields for certificates of deposit offered by the association range from 7% to 11% depending upon the term of the certificate. The policyholders have no contractual relationship with the association. Their rights are derived solely from their annuity contracts, and L may satisfy its obligations to the policyholders under these contracts using funds derived from sources other than the accounts held pursuant to the plans.

A policyholder may withdraw all or a portion of the cash surrender value of the contract at any time prior to the annuity starting date upon written request to L. The cash surrender value of the contract is the amount deposited plus interest credited less a charge for withdrawal. The withdrawal charge is the early withdrawal penalty charged by the savings and loan association plus any premium tax resulting from the withdrawal. The association does not have the right to distribute any assets from the savings and loan account directly to any policyholder or to any beneficiary or assignee.

The annuity contract allows the policyholder to elect one of a variety of settlement options including a lump-sum payment, a life income option, installment options for a specified period, and installment payments for a period certain and for life thereafter.

If a policyholder dies prior to the annuity starting date, a lump-sum is payable to the beneficiary in an amount equal to the cash surrender value on the date of death. The beneficiary, however, may instead elect to receive either an annuity for a term certain or a lifetime annuity, subject to a guaranteed minimum number of monthly installments.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 61(a) of the Internal Revenue Code provides that gross income means all income from whatever source derived, including interest.

To the extent that a policyholder under an annuity contract with a life insurance company possesses substantial incidents of ownership in an account established by the insurance company at the direction of the policyholder, the policyholder may be considered the owner of the account for federal income tax purposes. See Rev. Rul. 77-85, 1977-1 C.B. 12.

Under the annuity contract, the policyholder's position is substantially identical to what the policyholder's position would have been had the investment been directly maintained or established with the savings and loan association. Prior to the annuity starting date, L is little more than a conduit between the policyholder and the savings and loan association.

HOLDING

Prior to the annuity starting date, the policyholder, and not L, is the owner of the savings and loan account for federal income tax purposes and the interest on the account is thus includible in the policyholder's gross income under section 61(a) of the Code.

Section 170.—Charitable, Etc., Contributions and Gifts

26 CFR 1.170A-1: Charitable, etc., contributions and gifts; allowance of deduction. (Also Section 501; 1.501(a)-1.)

Charitable contribution; influencing legislation. A deduction is not allowable under section 170 of the Code for amounts paid to an organization exempt from tax under section 501(c)(3) and described in section 170(c)(2) that are earmarked for use in, or in connection with, influencing specific legislation.

Rev. Rul. 80-275

ISSUE

Is a charitable contribution deduction under section 170 of the Internal Revenue Code allowable for amounts paid to an organization exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) and described in section 170(c)(2), but which are earmarked for use in influencing specific legislation?

FACTS

X, a non-profit corporation, is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(a) of the Code as an organization described in section 501(c)(3). Section 501(c)(3) provides such exemption for entities organized and operated for educational and other charitable purposes. X is also an organization described in section 170(c)(2).

X became concerned with proposed legislation under consideration in the Congress of the United States. In order to obtain funds to enable it to influence specific legislation, X mailed to its members and the general public literature that described the pending legislation and requested contributions to be used to lobby members of the Congress to help defeat the specific proposed legislation.

HOLDING

No deduction is allowed under section 170 of the Code for contributions to X earmarked for use in, or in connection with, attempting to influence the legislation. See Rev. Rul. 79-81, 1979-1 C.B. 107; Rev. Rul. 68-484, 1968-2 C.B. 105; Rev. Rul. 62-113, 1962-2 C.B. 10; and Rev. Rul. 56-329, 1956-2 C.B. 125.

Section 401.—Qualified Pension, Profit-Sharing, and Stock Bonus Plans

26 CFR 1.401-1: Qualified pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans.

Normal retirement age; distribution before or at retirement. A profit-sharing plan will not fail to qualify merely because it provides for a normal retirement age of less than 65 years and for distribution of benefits at the time of that lesser age, whether or not the participant retires at that time; Rev. Ruls. 69-414 and 71-147 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-276

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate the position of Rev. Rul. 69-414, 1969-2 C.B. 59 and Rev. Rul. 71-147, 1971-1 C.B. 116, in view of enactment of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1.

The issue in Rev. Rul. 69-414 and Rev. Rul. 71-147 is whether a profit-sharing plan will fail to qualify under section 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code because of the provisions described below.

The plan, which otherwise meets the requirements for qualification under section 401(a) of the Code, provides that the normal retirement age is 55 and that each participant retiring at age 55 will receive a complete distribution of his or her interest under the plan. Employees in the particular industry involved customarily retire at age 65.

The plan also provides that a participant who does not plan to retire at age 55 may irrevocably elect, before age 55, to receive a complete distribution of his or her interest under the plan at age 55. If an employee continues in the employment of the employer after age 55, the plan provides that the employee will continue to share in the contributions to the plan in the same manner as before age 55.

Section 1.401-1(b)(1)(ii) of the Income Tax Regulations states that a qualified profit-sharing plan must provide for distributing the funds accumulated under the plan after a fixed number of years, the attainment of a stated age, or upon the prior occurrence of some event such as layoff, illness, disability, retirement, death or severance of employment.

Section 411(a)(8) of the Code provides that, for purposes of section 411, "normal retirement age" means the earlier of (1) the time a plan participant attains normal retirement age under the plan, or (2) the later of (a) the time a plan participant attains age 65, or (b) the 10th anniversary of the time a plan participant commenced participation in the plan.

The attainment of a stated age in a profit-sharing plan is merely one of several events that may be designated as fixing the time for making distributions from the plan. In view of the definition of normal retirement age found in section 411(a)(8) of the Code, and in the absence of any statutory prohibition or limitation, a profit-sharing plan may specify any age for distribution of benefits and, also, any age for normal retirement if it is less than the later of age 65 or the completion of 10 years of participation. See Rev. Rul. 78-120, 1978-1 C.B. 117, for the rules applicable to a pension plan. There is no requirement that the attainment of the stated age coincide with retirement or severance of employment in order to entitle a participant to a distribution from a profit-sharing plan.

Accordingly, this profit-sharing plan will not fail to qualify under section 401(a) of the Code because it provides for a normal retirement age of less than 65 and for distribution of benefits at the normal retirement age, whether or not the participant retires at that time.

Rev. Rul. 69-414 and Rev. Rul. 71-147 are superseded because the positions set forth therein are restated under current law in this Revenue Ruling.

Section 411.—Minimum Vesting Standards

26 CFR 1.411(d)-2: Termination or partial termination; discontinuance of contributions.

Qualification; employer contributions suspended; nonforfeiture of rights deferred. A profit-sharing plan that provides that nonforfeitability of participants' accounts during a period in which employer contributions are suspended will occur only when the aggregate contributions drop below an amount equal to three percent of aggregate covered compensation since the inception of the plan does not meet the requirements of section 411(d)(3) of the Code; Rev. Rul. 71-94 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-277

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate the position in Rev. Rul. 71-94, 1971-1 C.B. 125 in view of the enactment of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1.

The issue in Rev. Rul. 71-94 is whether a profit-sharing plan that contains the provisions described below meets the requirements concerning discontinuance of contributions under section 401(a)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code. The relevant portion of that section is now contained in section 411(d)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code as amended by ERISA.

The plan provides as follows: (a) the board of directors of the employer-corporation shall determine each year the amount of employer contributions to be made for such year; (b) if such board shall fail to make a determination, a contribution shall be made by the employer in accordance with a schedule of percentages which vary in proportion to the net-profit bracket into which the employer's profits fall for the year; (c) employer contributions will be considered completely discontinued if (and only if) at any time the aggregate of all contributions previously made drops below an amount equal to three percent of the aggregate of the covered compensation of participants since the inception of the plan; and (d) if a complete discontinuance, as defined in (c), is found to exist and the board fails to authorize a contribution sufficient to satisfy the minimum limitation of three percent of covered compensation, then the amounts credited to the participants' accounts are to become nonforfeitable.

Section 411(d)(3) of the Code provides that a trust shall not constitute a qualified trust unless the plan of which such trust is a part provides that, upon the termination or partial termination, or, in the case of a plan to which section 412 of the Code (relating to minimum funding standards) does not apply, upon the complete discontinuance of contributions under the plan, the rights of all affected employees to the benefits accrued to the date of such event, to the extent then funded, are nonforfeitable.

As pointed out in section 1.411(d)-2(d)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations a complete discontinuance of contributions may occur although some amounts are contributed by the employer under the plan if such amounts are not substantial enough to reflect the intent on the part of the employer to continue to maintain the plan. On the other hand, a suspension of contributions under the plan is a temporary cessation of contributions that may, or may not, ripen into a discontinuance. The determination of whether a discontinuance of contributions has occurred under a profit-sharing plan should be made with regard to all the facts and circumstances. This section also states that among the factors to be considered in determining whether a suspension constitutes a discontinuance are: (1) whether the employer may merely be calling an actual discontinuance of contributions a suspension of such contributions in order to avoid the requirement of full vesting as in the case of a discontinuance, or for any other reason; (2) whether contributions are recurring and substantial; and (3) whether there is any reasonable probability that the lack of contributions will continue indefinitely.

In determining whether a suspension of contributions has ripened into a complete discontinuance for the purpose of requiring nonforfeitability of rights as required by section 411(d)(3) of the Code, a conclusion cannot be based solely on the relationship between aggregate employer contributions and aggregate covered compensation during the prior operation of the plan. The factors to be considered under the regulations may not be ruled out in advance by the plan provisions.

Under the plan in this case, nonforfeitability will occur only when the aggregate contributions drop below an amount equal to three percent of aggregate covered compensation. Such conditions might not arise for a period of years after contributions have actually been completely discontinued if, for example, contributions made prior to suspension have been made at a substantially higher rate.

Accordingly, this profit-sharing plan does not meet the requirements of section 411(d)(3) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 71-94 is superseded because the position stated therein has been restated in this revenue ruling.

Section 501.—Exemption from Tax on Corporation, Certain Trusts, Etc.

26 CFR 1.501(a)-1: Exemption from taxation.

Whether amounts paid to a section 501(c)(3) organization that are earmarked for use in influencing legislation can be deducted under section 170 of the Code as a charitable contribution. See Rev. Rul. 80-275, page 6.

26 CFR 1.501(c)(3)-1: Organizations organized and operated for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals.

Litigation of environmental issues. An otherwise qualifying organization that was formed to protect and restore environmental quality and whose principal activity consists of instituting litigation as a party plaintiff to enforce environmental legislation is operated exclusively for charitable purposes and qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-278

ISSUE

Is an organization that institutes and maintains environmental litigation as a party plaintiff, under the circumstances described below, operated exclusively for charitable purposes within the meaning of section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization, which otherwise qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, was organized for the purpose of protecting and restoring environmental quality. Its activities include educational activities within the meaning of section 501(c)(3). Its principal activity, however, consists of instituting litigation as a party plaintiff under state and federal environmental legislation. Typical of its litigation is a suit it filed against a local manufacturer and the state environmental protection agency. The organization sought thereby to enjoin the manufacturer from emitting certain air contaminants from its plant in violation of the state air-quality legislation and to require the state agency to enforce that legislation.

The organization does not have its own staff of attorneys and does not provide legal representation to others. Instead, it employs private attorneys to represent it in bringing and maintaining environmental litigation. Such lawsuits are not brought in cases where a substantial purpose is to benefit a private party or interest. The organization's litigation program is financed through membership dues and contributions from the public.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation (except as otherwise provided in section 501(h)), and which does not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(a) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that an organization cannot be exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code unless it meets both an organizational and operational test. That is, the organization must be both organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes.

In determining whether an organization meets the operational test, the issue is whether the particular activity undertaken by the organization is appropriately in furtherance of the organization's exempt purpose, not whether that particular activity in and of itself would be considered charitable. Moreover, the fact that the activity reflects a particular viewpoint or opinion on a controversial issue does not preclude the organization from qualifying for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the regulations. Two organizations having the same charitable purpose may both be recognized as exempt even though their viewpoints on the subject may differ, and they may be undertaking differing, even conflicting, means to accomplish that charitable objective. See Restatement (Second) of Trusts, section 374, comment 1 (1959). The law of charity provides no basis for weighing or evaluating the objective merits of specific activities carried on in furtherance of a charitable purpose, if those activities are reasonably related to the accomplishment of the charitable purpose, and are not illegal or contrary to public policy.

Therefore, in making the determination of whether an organization's activities are consistent with exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, the Service will rely on a three-part test. The organization's activities will be considered permissible under section 501(c)(3) if:

(1) The purpose of the organization is charitable;

(2) the activities are not illegal, contrary to a clearly defined and established public policy, or in conflict with express statutory restrictions; and

(3) the activities are in furtherance of the organization's exempt purpose and are reasonably related to the accomplishment of that purpose.

It is generally recognized that efforts to preserve and protect the natural environment for the benefit of the public constitute a charitable purpose within the meaning of section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the regulations. The promotion of conservation and protection of natural resources has been recognized by Congress as serving a broad public benefit. See, e.g., the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, 42 U.S.C. section 4321 (1976). See also Rev. Rul. 76-204, 1976-1 C.B. 152, and the authorities cited therein. Thus, the organization's overall purpose is charitable.

Second, the organization's program of environmental litigation as party plaintiff clearly is not illegal, contrary to a clearly defined and established public policy, or violative of express statutory limitations, including the restrictions contained in section 501 (c) (3) of the Code prohibiting inurement of net earnings, substantial legislative activities, and participation or intervention in political campaigns.

In fact, Congress has provided for private litigation to enforce federal laws in numerous environmental statutes. See, e.g., the authorization for private suits to enforce the Clean Air Act, 42 U.S.C.A. section 7604 (1979); see also the citizen suit provision of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act Amendments of 1972, 33 U.S.C. section 1365 (1976). These provisions indicate Congressional approval of private litigation as a desirable and appropriate means of enforcing environmental statutes. Many state statutes contain similar provisions. In some instances, litigation under such a statute serves to assist the government in enforcing the statute. In other cases, the litigation facilitates judicial review of important issues and ensures that the statute is correctly interpreted and administered. See also Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 240, 271 (1975).

In view of the above authorities, it is also clear that the organization's litigation activities are a reasonable means of accomplishing its exempt purposes. Accordingly, the organization's activities meet the third part of the test; that is, its program of litigation as party plaintiff under state and federal environmental statues furthers the organization's exempt purposes and is reasonably related to the accomplishment of the charitable purposes for which the organization was formed.

Compare the facts of this ruling with the three situations in which the Service has previously recognized organizations that engage in litigation as being described in section 501(c)(3): (1) legal aid societies providing legal assistance to indigents (Rev. Rul. 69-161, 1969-1 C.B. 149); (2) organizations operated to defend human and civil rights secured by law (Rev. Rul. 73-285, 1973-2 C.B. 171); and (3) public interest law firms providing legal representation on issues of significant public interest (Rev. Rul. 75-74, 1975-1 C.B. 152, Rev. Rul. 75-75, 1975-1 C.B. 154, Rev. Rul. 75-76, 1975-1 C.B. 154, Rev. Rul. 76-5, 1976-1 C.B. 146, Rev. Proc. 71-39, 1971-2 C.B. 575, and Rev. Proc. 75-13, 1975-1 C.B. 662). These types of organizations generally have staff attorneys providing legal representation to outside clients or groups, as distinguished from the organization itself being the plaintiff in litigation.

HOLDING

An organization that institutes and maintains environmental litigation as party plaintiff, under the circumstances described above, is operated exclusively for charitable purposes and qualifies for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See sections 1.501(a)-1 and 1.508-1(a) of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1023, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

Mediation of international environmental disputes. An otherwise qualifying organization that engages in legal research concerning various means of adjusting and resolving international environmental disputes and arranges for, and participates in, the resolution of such disputes through mediation is exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-279

ISSUE

Does an organization that conducts mediation of international environmental disputes, under the circumstances described below, qualify for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization, which otherwise qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, was formed for the purposes of engaging in legal research concerning various means of adjusting and resolving international environmental disputes, and arranging for and participating in the resolution of such disputes through the use of mediation. An international environmental dispute might arise, for example, in a situation where undesirable environmental conditions in one country are caused by industrial emissions originating in a neighboring country. Such disputes cannot generally be dealt with satisfactorily under the laws of any one country or under existing international law.

The organization conducts research to ascertain the potential for mediation to resolve certain international environmental disputes. Their research includes the identification of the issues under dispute, the assessment of the willingness of the parties to submit the dispute to mediation, and the making of an offer to conduct the mediation using its own staff of mediators and technical experts or to seek mediators acceptable to both parties.

The results of the organization's research and mediation activities are made known to the public by means of lectures and published articles and interviews. The organization's primary sources of income are grants from foundations and U.S. government agencies. The organization also receives fees for its mediation services from the parties involved, but these fees are set at or below cost.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(a) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that an organization cannot be exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code unless it meets both an organizational and operational test. That is, the organization must be both organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes.

In determining whether an organization meets the operational test, the issue is whether the particular activity undertaken by the organization is appropriately in furtherance of the organization's exempt purpose, not whether that particular activity in and of itself would be considered charitable. Moreover, the fact that the activity reflects a particular viewpoint or opinion on a controversial issue does not preclude the organization from qualifying for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the regulations. Two organizations having the same charitable purpose may both be recognized as exempt even though their viewpoints on the subject may differ, and they may be undertaking differing, even conflicting, means to accomplish that charitable objective. See Restatement (Second) of Trusts, section 374, comment 1 (1959). The law of charity provides no basis for weighing or evaluating the objective merits of specific activities carried on in furtherance of a charitable purpose, if those activities are reasonably related to the accomplishment of the charitable purpose, and are not illegal or contrary to public policy.

Therefore, in making the determination of whether an organization's activities are consistent with exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, the Service will rely on a three-part test. The organization's activities will be considered permissible under section 501(c)(3) if:

(1) The purpose of the organization is charitable;

(2) the activities are not illegal, contrary to a clearly defined and established public policy, or in conflict with express statutory restrictions; and

(3) the activities are in furtherance of the organization's exempt purpose and are reasonably related to the accomplishment of that purpose.

See Rev. Rul. 80-278, page 8, this Bulletin.

It is generally recognized that efforts to preserve and protect the natural environment for the benefit of the public constitute a charitable purpose within the meaning of section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the regulations. The promotion of conservation and protection of natural resources has been recognized by Congress as serving a broad public benefit. See, e.g., the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969, 42 U.S.C. section 4321 (1976). See also Rev. Rul. 76-204, 1976-1 C.B. 152, and the authorities cited therein. Thus, the organization's overall purpose is charitable.

In addition, the organization's program of environmental mediation clearly is not illegal, contrary to a clearly defined and established public policy, or violative of express statutory limitations. Further, it is a form of private action that is clearly desirable in terms of the implementation of the existing public policy regarding preservation and protection of the environment. See Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society, 421 U.S. 240, 271 (1975). Thus, the organization's program of arranging for and participating in environmental mediation on the international level is an appropriate means of implementing environmental policy and is reasonably related to the accomplishment of the charitable purpose for which the organization was formed.

HOLDING

An organization that conducts mediation of international environmental disputes, under the circumstances described above, qualifies for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See sections 1.501(a)-1 and 1.508-1(a) of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1023, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

Section 856.—Definition of Real Estate Investment Trust

26 CFR 1.856-2: Limitations.

Real estate investment trust; hypothecation loans. An otherwise qualifying real estate investment trust makes nonrecourse "hypothecation loans" to developers of commercial real estate. The loans are secured by first mortgage notes on commercial real property owned by third parties that are assigned to the trust. Until maturity of the hypothecation loans, the trust collects all payments on the mortgage notes, retains interest due from the hypothecation borrower, and remits the balance to such borrower. The interest received by the trust meets the requirements of section 856(c)(3)(B) of the Code, and the hypothecation loans held by the trust are "real estate assets" under section 856(c)(5) and (6)(B).

Rev. Rul. 80-280

ISSUES

1. Is interest received, under the circumstances described below, "interest on obligations secured by mortgages on real property" within the meaning of section 856(c)(3)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code?

2. Are the hypothecation loans described below, "real estate assets" within the meaning of section 856 (c)(5) and (6)(B)?

FACTS

M, an unincorporated trust, otherwise qualifying as a real estate investment trust under section 856 of the Code, engages in lending activities, including the making of "hypothecation loans" to developers of commercial real estate. The terms of the hypothecation loans made by M range between one and seven years with interest payable monthly and principal due upon maturity. Repayment of such loans is secured by assignment to M of first mortgage notes owned by the hypothecation borrowers. The first mortgage notes are secured by commercial real property owned by unrelated third parties and have terms of from 15 to 40 years.

The mortgage notes given as security for M's loans are endorsed by M's borrowers in M's favor without recourse and delivered to M. The hypothecation loans are also nonrecourse except for the security of the mortgage notes assigned as collateral. M requires sufficient collateral to assure that the balances of the hypothecation loans never exceed 80 percent of the unpaid balance of the notes assigned as security. Under the agreement with M's hypothecation borrowers, M collects all amounts payable by the original mortgagors, retains interest due from the hypothecation borrower out of the payments, and remits the balance to the hypothecation borrower. M reendorses the mortgage notes (without recourse) and redelivers them to the hypothecation borrowers following full repayment of principal and interest due on the hypothecation loans.

As holder of the mortgage notes, M is able to enforce payment in its own name if an original mortgagor should default. M's only security for the hypothecation loans is the mortgaged property if an original mortgagor defaults. In the event of such a default, M has the same rights as the original mortgagee to force a sale of the mortgaged property and satisfy the obligation of the hypothecation borrower out of the sales proceeds.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 856(c)(3)(B) of the Code provides that a corporation, trust, or association shall not be considered a real estate investment trust for any taxable year unless at least 75 percent of its gross income (excluding gross income from prohibited transactions) is derived from certain sources, including interest on obligations secured by mortgages on real property or on interests in real property.

Section 856(c)(5) of the Code requires that at the close of each quarter of a real estate investment trust's taxable year, at least 75 percent of the trust's assets must be represented by certain assets including real estate assets.

Section 856(c)(6)(B) of the Code provides that the term "real estate assets" means real property (including interests in real property and interests in mortgages on real property) and shares (or transferable certificates of beneficial interest) in other real estate investment trusts that meet the requirements of sections 856 through 860.

The security for the hypothecation loans made by M is the mortgage notes of the unrelated third parties. Therefore, the hypothecation loans are obligations secured by mortgages on real property and are interests in mortgages on real property.

HOLDINGS

1. The interest received by M from the hypothecation loans is "interest on obligations secured by mortgages on real property or on interests in real property" with the meaning of section 856(c)(3)(B) of the Code.

2. The hypothecation loans held by M are "real estate assets" within the meaning of section 856(c)(5) and (6)(B) of the Code.

Section 2522.—Charitable and Similar Gifts

26 CFR 25.2522(a)-1: Charitable and similar gifts; citizens or residents.

Annuity purchased from charitable organization; deduction. A taxpayer purchased from a charitable organization an annuity that is payable for the taxpayer's life from the general funds of the charity. A gift tax charitable deduction is allowable for the amount paid to the charity that exceeds the present value of the annuity.

Rev. Rul. 80-281

ISSUE

Is a gift tax charitable deduction allowable under section 2522 of the Internal Revenue Code, where a donor purchases an annuity from a charitable organization under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

On January 1, 1980, A purchased an annuity from N, a charitable organization described in sections 170(c) and 2522(a) of the Internal Revenue Code. Under the agreement A paid 100*x* dollars in return for an annuity of 5*x* dollars, payable in equal quarterly installments for A's life. The annuity is payable out of the general funds of N charity. The value of the annuity received was less than 100*x* dollars.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2511 of the Internal Revenue Code provides that the gift tax applies whether the transfer is in trust or otherwise, and whether the gift is direct or indirect.

Section 2512(b) of the Code provides that where property is transferred for less than adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth, the amount by which the value of the property exceeds the value of the consideration received shall be deemed a gift.

Section 2522 of the Code provides a gift tax charitable deduction for the value of property transferred to charities described in section 2522(a).

Section 2522(c)(2) of the Code provides that where a donor transfers a remainder interest in property to a charitable organization and has retained an interest in the same property, no deduction is allowed for the interest passing to charity unless it is in a qualified form (charitable remainder annuity trust, charitable remainder unitrust or a pooled income fund).

In the instant case, A has made a gift to N charity, to the extent that the value of the property transferred by A exceeds the present value of the annuity received. The annuity rates to be used in determining the present value of A's annuity are set forth in Rev. Rul. 72-438, 1972-2 C.B. 38.

Here, the annuity is payable out of the general funds of N charity, rather than the specific 100*x* dollars transferred by A. Thus, A has not retained any interest in the 100*x* dollars transferred to N. Therefore, the provisions of section 2522(c) are not applicable, and a deduction is allowable under section 2522(a) of the Code. See also section 1.170A-1(d) of the Income Tax Regulations.

HOLDING

Under section 2522(a) of the Code, a gift tax charitable deduction is allowable. The deduction is equal to the amount by which the value of the property transferred by A (100*x* dollars) exceeds the present value of the annuity received by A.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION

BACKGROUND

On April 4, 1980, the Federal Register published temporary regulations (45 F.R. 23384) under sections 4986, 4987, 4988, 4989, 4991, 4992, 4993, 4994, 4995, 4996, 4997, 6050C, 6076, and 6402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The temporary regulations were required to implement various sections of the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980. This document contains an amendment to § 150.4989-1(c)(2) of those temporary regulations (relating to the interim rule for determining tier 2 and tier 3 base prices).

The regulations promulgated in this document are also proposed to be prescribed as final Excise Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 51).

EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

Numerous commentators on the proposed windfall profit tax regulations published on April 4, 1980 requested that further guidance be provided as to what constitutes a valid posted price for purposes of the interim base price rule for tier 2 and tier 3 oil. Several commentators suggested that the concepts contained in FEA Ruling 1977-1, which sets forth the criteria for a valid posted price in determining ceiling prices, be adopted for the purpose of determining which prices should be used in computing the interim base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil. That suggestion has been accepted, and these regulations adopt the principles contained in FEA Ruling 1977-1 with the modifications necessary to conform those rules to the windfall profit tax.

Because these regulations are effective with respect to oil removed after February 29, 1980, purchasers will be required to make withholding adjustments if it is determined that an improper base price has been used in computing windfall profit tax withholding.

WAIVER OF PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS OF TREASURY DIRECTIVE

The expeditious adoption of the provisions contained in this document is necessary because of the need for immediate guidance to taxpayers liable for the windfall profit tax on domestic crude oil and to other persons required to withhold and deposit tax, file returns, provide information, etc. For this reason, Jerome Kurtz, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has determined that the provisions of paragraphs 8 through 14 of the Treasury Department directive implementing Executive Order 12044 must be waived.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is David B. Cubeta of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, Part 150, Temporary Excise Tax Regulations under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, is amended as follows:

Paragraph 1. Paragraph (c) of § 150.4989-1 is amended by revising the flush language following subparagraph (2)(ii)(B). Amended paragraph (c) reads as follows:

§ 150.4989-1 Adjusted base price.

(c) Base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil—(1) General rule. [Reserved]

(2) Interim rule. This subparagraph and subparagraph (3) apply to oil removed during a month beginning before October 1980 (or such earlier date as may be provided in regulations taking effect before such earlier date). Except as provided in subparagraph (3), the base prices for tier 2 oil and tier 3 oil, respectively, shall be the product of—

(i)(A) The highest posted price for December 31, 1979, for uncontrolled crude oil of the same grade, quality, and field, or

(B) If there is no posted price described in inferior subdivision (A), the highest posted price for such date for uncontrolled crude oil at the nearest domestic field for which prices for oil of the same grade and quality were posted for such date, multiplied by

(ii) A fraction the denominator of which is $35, and the numerator of which is—

(A) $15.20 for purposes of determining base prices of tier 2 oil, and

(B) $16.55 for purposes of determining base prices of tier 3 oil.

In determining the base price for tier 2 or tier 3 oil, the grade and quality of the oil produced in December 1979 shall be used. For purposes of determining the highest posted price for December 31, 1979, "posted price" means a written statement of crude oil prices constituting an offer to purchase oil at that price circulated publicly among sellers and buyers of crude oil in a particular field in accordance with historic practices. Although the formality of a printed price bulletin such as is published by major purchasers is not necessary for a price to be a valid posted price, the formality of a publicly circulated written offer is necessary. The requirement that the offer be in writing and publicly circulated eliminates oral offers and offers made only to specified producers. Accordingly, other than the published price bulletins of the type traditionally issued by major oil companies, written offers to purchase constitute a "posted price" only if they are bona.fide public offers of general applicability to crude oil producers in the field. For example, a letter from a purchaser to all crude oil producers in a field or in an area would constitute a posted price if the letter was a bona fide offer to purchase from all producers in that field or area. A written contract, of course, would not qualify as a posted price because it represents an agreement between a buyer and specific producer, not a bona fide offer to purchase from all producers. Accordingly, in determining the "highest posted price," a producer should first determine which offers qualify as posted prices for December 31, 1979. Because a posted price must constitute an offer to purchase, an offer does not constitute a posted price for December 31, 1979, unless the offer was initially made on or before December 31, 1979, and was in effect for oil purchased on that date. However, in determining the highest posted price for December 31, 1979, a valid posted price that was adjusted in a subsequent posted price circulated on or before January 14, 1980, shall be considered to be an offer made at the price as adjusted so long as the adjusted price applies to all oil purchased pursuant to the initial offer. In determining which posted prices were applicable to a particular field on December 31, 1979, the term "field" means a general area underlain by one or more reservoirs. Historical field designations commonly used by regulatory agencies and the oil industry will generally be used in the determination of a given field. Price bulletins which specify only a geographical area and crude oil grade (e.g., "West Texas Sour") are presumed to be applicable to every field within the named area, unless a particular field is specifically excluded. However, the existence of a price bulletin stating a higher price for specifically named fields within the same area supersedes the area-wide price bulletin for the named field only. Finally, posted prices do not include either offers to buy at a price not specified in a sum certain (e.g., a price "determined by the purchaser to be competitive") or premiums above posted prices which may have been paid for crude oil purchased on December 31, 1979.

(3) Minimum interim base price. The base price determined under paragraph (c)(2) of this section for tier 2 oil or tier 3 oil shall not be less than the sum of—

(i) The ceiling price which would have applied to such oil under the March 1979 energy regulations if it had been produced and sold in May 1979 as upper tier oil, plus

(ii)(A) $1 in the case of tier 2 oil, or

(B) $2 in the case of tier 3 oil.

For purposes of this determination, the grade and quality of the oil produced from the property in May 1979 shall be used.

There is need for the immediate guidance provided by the provisions contained in this Treasury decision. For this reason, it is found impracticable to issue this Treasury decision with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 4997 and 7805 of title 26 of the United States Code.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER D, PART 150.—TEMPORARY EXCISE TAX REGULA-

TIONS UNDER THE CRUDE OIL WINDFALL PROFIT TAX ACT OF 1980

Base prices of tier 2 and tier 3 oil

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides temporary excise tax regulations relating to base prices of tier 2 and tier 3 oil for purposes of the windfall profit tax on oil imposed by title I of the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 [Pub. L. 96-223, 1980-3 C.B. 2]. These base prices are generally determined under a formula calculated by reference to the actual removal price of oil rather than posted prices, which are used only for oil removed before October 1, 1980. The prices are those for oil removed during the base period, December 1979. The regulations also establish minimum base prices calculated by multiplying a property's May 1979 upper tier ceiling price by 1.1 (for tier 2 oil) or 1.2 (for tier 3 oil).

This document also amends the rules relating to withholding of the windfall profit tax in the absence of current data on an effective operator's certificate.

In addition, the text of the temporary regulations set forth in this document serves as the text of proposed regulations cross-referenced in the Proposed Rules section of the issue of the Federal Register for September 30, 1980, FR 64603.

DATES: The temporary regulations relating to base prices are effective with respect to liability for windfall profit tax upon crude oil removed from the premises after September 30, 1980. However, persons required to withhold or deposit the windfall profit tax may, at their option, continue to withhold or deposit under the old base price rules through November 30, 1980. Similarly, the amendment to the rules relating to operators' certificates is effective on the latter date unless the purchaser chooses an earlier date.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

This document contains temporary regulations under section 4989(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, relating to base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil. On April 4, 1980, temporary and proposed regulations under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 were published in the Federal Register (45 FR 23384). The original temporary regulations (Treasury Decision 7690 [1980-16 I.R.B. 11, 15]), in paragraph (c)(2) of § 150.4989-1, provided an interim rule for determining those base prices. That interim rule was amended in Treasury Decision 7720 (published in the Federal Register for September 24, 1980) [page 12, this Bulletin] to clarify what constitutes a valid posted price. The interim rule expires on October 1, 1980 (or on an earlier date if a permanent rule is provided by regulations effective before that date). The new temporary regulations in this document provide a permanent rule for determining base prices, effective with respect to tax liability for crude oil removed from the premises after September 30, 1980. However, persons required to withhold or deposit the tax may, at their option, use the interim rule through November 30, 1980. Adjustments to withholding for prior inaccuracies in withholding, taking into account the new rules in the case of oil removed after September 30, 1980, shall be made pursuant to paragraph (c) of § 150.4995-1.

The temporary regulations prescribed in this document are also proposed to be prescribed as final excise tax regulations (26 CFR Part 51) under sections 4989(d) and 4995 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

BASE PRICES

These temporary regulations provide new excise tax regulations under Code section 4989(d), relating to base prices of tier 2 and tier 3 crude oil for purposes of the windfall profit tax. The windfall profit tax is imposed upon the windfall profit, defined as the difference between the removal price of the barrel of crude oil and the sum of the adjusted base price of the barrel of oil plus a severance tax adjustment. The adjusted base price is the base price adjusted by an inflation adjustment formula provided in section 4989(b).

Under section 4989(d)(1), the permanent base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil are prices determined pursuant to the method prescribed by regulations. The method prescribed by the regulations must be designed so as to yield, with respect to oil of any grade, quality, and field, a base price approximating the price at which such oil would have sold in December 1979 if it is assumed that all domestic crude oil was uncontrolled and the average removal price for all domestic crude oil (excluding Sadlerochit oil) was $15.20 a barrel (for tier 2 oil) and $16.55 a barrel (for tier 3 oil). The regulations provide a formula for determining base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 crude oil. The formula assumes that the same grade, quality, and location factors that caused a certain uncontrolled domestic crude oil to sell for more or less than the actual average uncontrolled price of all domestic crude oil (excluding Sadlerochit oil) in the base period would cause similar crude oil to sell for proportionately more or less than the applicable statutory average uncontrolled price of $15.20 or $16.55. For purposes of the formula, the temporary regulations establish that the actual average removal price for uncontrolled domestic crude oil during the base period was $35.80.

BASE PERIOD UNCONTROLLED SALES

The temporary regulations, in § 150.4989-1(c)(4), provide rules relating to uncontrolled base period sales, which produce the variable price factor to be used in the formula for determining base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil. The term "base period" is defined as December 1979, pursuant to the statutory mandate in section 4989 (d)(1).

CONSTRUCTIVE UNCONTROLLED BASE PERIOD BASE

The temporary regulations, in § 150.4989-1(c)(3), provide rules for determining the base price for tier 2 and tier 3 oil produced from a reservoir that did not produce oil sold by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled base period sales. In the case of a transfer of a property after November 30, 1979, the taxpayer takes the base price of the taxpayer's transferor. The taxpayer must obtain a statement of such base price from the transferor, the operator, or the first purchaser. In a case where no such transfer took place, the taxpayer's constructive uncontrolled base period sales price is determined by reference to the following prices (stated in the order of priority): The representative market or field price of oil of similar grade and quality produced from the same reservoir during the base period; or base period prices of oil of similar grade and quality purchased or sold by the taxpayer from the nearest reservoir that produced such oil during the base period; or the representative market or field price of such oil from the nearest reservoir (from which no oil was purchased or sold by the taxpayer in uncontrolled base period sales). If none of these rules apply, the tax shall be computed on the basis of the minimum base price under § 150.4989-1(c)(6) of the temporary regulations. Similarly, if under the taxpayer's particular facts and circumstances the taxpayer is required to make a determination under one of these rules and fails to do so, the tax shall be computed on the basis of the minimum base price and not under any other rule.

MINIMUM BASE PRICES

The temporary regulations, in § 150.4989-1(c)(6), provide a rule under which minimum base prices are established. This rule is similar to the minimum base price rule under the interim rule in section 4989(d)(3). However, multipliers rather than dollar amounts are used in computing the minimum. The minimum base price rule is prescribed because the Treasury Department has determined that the actual selling price of certain oil during the base period did not reflect its value relative to other oil. The minimum base price rule is prescribed in response to a clear Congressional intention reflected in the legislative history of the windfall profit tax. The Conference Report (H.R. Rep. No. 96-817, 96th Cong., 2d Sess. 97 (March 7, 1980) [1980-3 C.B. 245, 257]) states: "[T]he interim rule may lead to inequities in the case of oil produced in California and certain other areas because its December 1979 price was much lower, relative to the national average, than it had been in prior years and is likely to be in the future." The conferees noted that they had given "the Secretary enough flexibility to devise a permanent solution to this problem."

ABSENCE OF COMPLETE AND CURRENT OPERATOR'S CERTIFICATE

The temporary regulations also amend the withholding rules under § 150.4995-1(b)(2) that apply when the purchaser has not received the operator's certification under section 6050C or when the purchaser has reason to believe that certain information provided by the operator is not correct. The new rules provide that the purchaser may continue to rely on the portion of the certified information that there is no reason to believe is not correct. The rules also set forth assumptions that are to be substituted for the item of information that is missing or that the purchaser has reason to believe is not correct. These rules would apply, for example, when the effective date for the new rules for withholding on the permanent base price rule has passed and the purchaser has not yet received a revised base price certification.

WAIVER OF PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS OF TREASURY DIRECTIVE

There is need for expeditious adoption of the provisions contained in this document because of the need to provide a permanent base price rule before the expiration of the interim base price rules on September 30, 1980, and because of the necessity of allowing sufficient time for those who must compute or withhold the windfall profit tax to ascertain the applicable base price. For this reason, Jerome Kurtz, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has determined that the provisions of paragraphs 8 through 14 of the Treasury Department directive implementing Executive Order 12044 must be waived.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations was Eileen Murphy of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing these regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, Part 150, Temporary Excise Tax Regulations under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, is amended as follows:

Paragraph 1. Paragraph (c) of § 150.4989-1 is revised to read as follows:

§ 150.4989-1 Adjusted base price.

(c) Base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil—(1) In general. Except as otherwise provided in the minimum base price and interim rules set forth in paragraph (c)(6) and (8) of this section, the base prices for tier 2 oil and tier 3 oil shall be determined under paragraph (c)(2) or (3). Paragraph (c)(2) and (3) provides rules designed to approximate the price at which oil would have sold in December 1979, taking into account quality, grade, and field, if it is assumed that all domestic crude oil was uncontrolled and the average removal price of all domestic crude oil (other than Sadlerochit oil was $15.20 a barrel for tier 2 oil and $16.55 a barrel for tier 3 oil. The rules of paragraph (c)(2) apply to oil produced from a reservoir that produced oil sold by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled base period sales.

The rules of paragraph (c)(3) generally apply to all other tier 2 or tier 3 oil. For definitions relating to uncontrolled base period sales, see paragraph (c)(4). For effective date provisions, see paragraph (c)(7).

(2) Oil produced from a reservoir that produced oil sold by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled base period sales. The base price for tier 2 or tier 3 oil produced from a reservoir that produced oil sold by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled base period sales (see paragraph (c)(4)) is determined by multiplying the uncontrolled base period price per barrel by the tier 2 multiplier in the case of tier 2 oil or by the tier 3 multiplier in the case of tier 3 oil. See paragraph (c)(5) for the definitions of the tier 2 multiplier and the tier 3 multiplier. The uncontrolled base period price per barrel of oil from a reservoir is the weighted average removal price per barrel of oil from the reservoir sold by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled sales during the base period, determined without regard to any price adjustments made after February 29, 1980. The weighted average is obtained by multiplying the number of barrels sold at each price by the price at which the barrels were sold, adding the products, and dividing by the total number of barrels sold in such sales.

(3) Oil produced from a reservoir that did not produce oil sold by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled base period sales—(i) In general. The base price for tier 2 or tier 3 oil produced from a reservoir that did not produce oil sold by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled base period sales is determined by multiplying the constructive uncontrolled base period price by the tier 2 multiplier in the case of tier 2 oil or by the tier 3 multiplier in the case of tier 3 oil. However, in the case of a transfer of a property to the taxpayer after November 30, 1979, if the taxpayer's transferor sold production from the reservoir from which the taxpayer's oil is produced in uncontrolled base period sales, the taxpayer's base price shall be—

(A) If the taxpayer obtains a written statement under the penalties of perjury from the transferor, or the transferor's operator or first purchaser, setting forth the transferor's base price for tier 2 or tier 3 oil and all facts bearing on the correctness of that base price, the base price of the taxpayer's transferor; and

(B) If the taxpayer does not obtain such a statement, the minimum base price provided in paragraph (c)(6) of this section.

(ii) Constructive uncontrolled base period price. For purposes of paragraph (c)(3)(i), the constructive uncontrolled base period price is the price that would have been obtained for the oil if it had been sold in uncontrolled sales by or for the taxpayer during the base period. In making this determination of constructive uncontrolled base period price:

(A) If oil of similar grade and quality was produced from the same reservoir and sold in uncontrolled sales during the base period, then the taxpayer's constructive uncontrolled base period price is the representative market or field price of such oil.

(B) If paragraph (c)(3)(ii)(A) does not apply and oil of similar grade and quality (1) was sold or purchased by or for the taxpayer in uncontrolled sales or purchases during the base period, and (2) was produced from the nearest reservoir from which oil of similar grade and quality was sold by or for any producer in uncontrolled sales during the base period, then the taxpayer's constructive uncontrolled base period price is the weighted average removal price per barrel of such oil.

(C) If paragraph (c)(3)(ii)(A) and (B) does not apply, then the taxpayer's constructive uncontrolled base period price is the representative market or field price of oil of similar grade and quality from the nearest reservoir from which such oil was produced and sold (by or for a producer other than the taxpayer) in uncontrolled sales during the base period.

If the taxpayer does not make the determination required by paragraph (c)(3)(ii)(A), (B), or (C) of this section (whichever is applicable under the circumstances of the taxpayer) the tax shall be computed on the basis of a base price that is the minimum base price determined under paragraph (c)(6) of this section. For purposes of this subdivision, the term "representative market or field price" has the same meaning as the meaning with which that term is used in the regulations under section 613. Also, prices shall be determined without regard to any price adjustment made after February 29, 1980.

(4) Uncontrolled base period sales. For purposes of paragraph (c)(1), (2), and (3) of this section, the term "uncontrolled sales" means sales in arms-length transactions at prices not subject to price controls imposed by the energy regulations. The term "base period" means December 1979.

(5) Tier 2 multiplier and tier 3 multiplier. For purposes of this section—

(i) The tier 2 multiplier is 0.42458 (the number representing the ratio of $15.20, the statutory average removal price for uncontrolled domestic crude oil to be used in the case of tier 2 oil, to $35.80, the actual average removal price for all uncontrolled domestic crude oil (except Sadlerochit oil) sold during the base period), and

(ii) The tier 3 multiplier is 0.46229 (the number representing the ratio of $16.55 to $35.80).

(6) Minimum base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil. The base price determined under paragraph (c)(1) through (5) of this section for tier 2 or tier 3 crude oil shall not be less than the product of—

(i) The ceiling price which would have applied to such oil under the March 1979 energy regulations if it had been produced and sold in May 1979 as upper tier oil, multiplied by

(ii)(A) 1.1 in the case of tier 2 oil, or

(B) 1.2 in the case of tier 3 oil.

For purposes of this determination, the grade and quality of the oil produced from the property in May 1979 shall be used.

(7) Effective dates. The rules of paragraph (c)(1) through (6) of this section are effective with respect to tax liability for crude oil removed from the premises after September 30, 1980. However, persons required by § 150.4995-1 to withhold windfall profit tax or by § 150.4995-3 to deposit payments of that tax may, at their option, continue to use through November 30, 1980, the interim rule set forth in paragraph (c)(8) of this section for purposes of determining the amount to be withheld or deposited. After November 30, 1980, withholding and depositing under the new rules are mandatory and adjustments to withholding for prior inaccuracies in withholding, taking account of the new rules in the case of oil removed after September 30, 1980, shall be made pursuant to paragraph (c) of § 150.4995-1.

(8) Interim rule. (i) This subparagraph applies to oil removed during a month before October 1980. Except as provided in paragraph (c)(8)(ii) of this section, the base prices for tier 2 oil and tier 3 oil, respectively, shall be the product of—

(A) The highest posted price for December 31, 1979, for uncontrolled crude oil of the same grade, quality, and field, or, if there is no such posted price, the highest posted price for such date for uncontrolled crude oil at the nearest domestic field for which prices for oil of the same grade and quality were posted for such date, multiplied by

(B) A fraction the denominator of which is $35, and the numerator of which is $15.20 for purposes of determining base prices of tier 2 oil and $16.55 for purposes of determining base prices of tier 3 oil.

In determining the base price for tier 2 or tier 3 oil, the grade and quality of the oil produced in December 1979 shall be used. For purpose of determining the highest posted price for December 31, 1979, "posted price" means a written statement of crude oil prices constituting an offer to purchase oil at that price circulated publicly among sellers and buyers of crude oil in a particular field in accordance with historic practices. Although the formality of a printed price bulletin such as is published by major purchasers is not necessary for a price to be a valid posted price, the formality of a publicly circulated written offer is necessary. The requirement that the offer be in writing and publicly circulated eliminates oral offers and offers made only to specified producers. Accordingly, other than the published price bulletins of the type traditionally issued by major oil companies, written offers to purchase constitute a "posted price" only if they are bona fide public offers of general applicability to crude oil producers in the field. For example, a letter from a purchaser to all crude oil producers in a field or in an area would constitute a posted price if the letter was a bona fide offer to purchase from all producers in that field or area. A written contract, of course, would not qualify as a posted price because it represents an agreement between a buyer and specific producer, not a bona fide offer to purchase from all producers. Accordingly, in determining the "highest posted price," a producer should first determine which offers qualify as posted prices for December 31, 1979. Because a posted price must constitute an offer to purchase, an offer does not constitute a posted price for December 31, 1979, unless the offer was initially made on or before December 31, 1979, and was in effect for oil purchased on that date. However, in determining the highest posted price for December 31, 1979, a valid posted price that was adjusted in a subsequent posted price circulated on or before January 14, 1980, shall be considered to be an offer made at the price as adjusted so long as the adjusted price applies to all oil purchased pursuant to the initial offer. In determining which posted prices were applicable to a particular field on December 31, 1979, the term "field" means a general area underlain by one or more reservoirs. Historical field designations commonly used by regulatory agencies and the oil industry will generally be used in the determination of a given field. Price bulletins which specify only a geographical area and crude oil grade (e.g., "West Texas Sour") are presumed to be applicable to every field within the named area, unless a particular field is specifically excluded. However, the existence of a price bulletin stating a higher price for specifically named fields within the same area supersedes the area-wide price bulletin for the named field only. Finally, posted prices do not include either offers to buy at a price not specified in a sum certain (e.g., a price "determined by the purchaser to be competitive") or premiums above posted prices which may have been paid for crude oil purchased on December 31, 1979.

(ii) Minimum interim base price. The base price determined under paragraph (c)(8)(i) of this section for tier 2 oil or tier 3 oil shall not be less than the sum of—

(A) The ceiling price which would have applied to such oil under the March 1979 energy regulations if it had been produced and sold in May 1979 as upper tier oil, plus

(B) $1 in the case of tier 2 oil or $2 in the case of tier 3 oil.

For purposes of this determination, the grade and quality of the oil produced from the property in May 1979 shall be used.

(b) Amount to be deducted and withheld. * * *

(2) Absence of completed and current operator's certification. (i) In general. This subparagraph applies if the purchaser has not received the certification required to be furnished by the operator pursuant to section 6050C and § 150.6050C-1, or if the certification does not contain all the information necessary for the purchaser to compute the amount to be withheld under paragraph (b)(1) of this section, or if the purchaser has reason to believe that any information contained in that certification that affects the tax computation is not correct (including information that was correct when provided but that has become incorrect, such as a base price that was correct under the interim rule of § 150.4989-1(c)(8) after that rule ceases to apply). In such a case, the amount of tax to be deducted and withheld under paragraph (a) of this section is the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 (without regard to the net income limitation provided in section 4988(b)) based on the information, if any, provided in the operator's certification that the purchaser has no reason to believe is not correct, and on the substitution of the following assumptions for any item of information that is absent from the certification or that the purchaser has reason to believe is not correct:

(A) If the item that is absent or that the purchaser has reason to believe is not correct is the tax tier of the oil, the oil shall be assumed to be in tier 1 subject to the 70 percent rate of tax;

(B) If the item is the adjusted base price, the adjusted base price shall be assumed to be—

(1) In the case of tier 1 oil, $11.01 plus the amount equal to $11.01 multiplied by the inflation adjustment provided under section 4989(b)(1) for the calendar quarter in which the oil was removed,

(2) In the case of tier 2 oil, $12.11 (the amount equal to $11.01 multiplied by 1.1, the amount specified in § 150.4989-1(c)(6)(ii)(A)) plus the amount equal to $12.11 multiplied by the inflation adjustment provided under section 4989(b)(1) for the calendar quarter in which the oil was removed, and

(3) In the case of tier 3 oil, $13.21 (the amount equal to $11.01 multiplied by 1.2, the amount specified in § 150.4989-1(c)(6)(ii)(B)) plus the amount equal to $13.21 multiplied by the inflation adjustment provided under section 4989(b)(2) for the calendar quarter in which the oil was removed;

(C) If the item is the severance tax adjustment provided by section 4996(c), the severance tax adjustment shall be assumed to be inapplicable unless the amount of that adjustment is known by the purchaser.

(ii) Effective date. Notwithstanding paragraph (f) of this section, this subparagraph is effective with respect to payments made after November 30, 1980, for oil removed on or after March 1, 1980, unless the purchaser chooses to apply this subparagraph at an earlier date. However, prior to the effective date of this subparagraph as provided in the preceding sentence, this subparagraph as originally promulgated in Treasury Decision 7690 (see 45 FR 23384) is effective as provided in paragraph (f) of this section.

There is need for the immediate guidance provided by the provisions contained in this Treasury decision. For this reason, it is found impracticable to issue this Treasury decision with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 4989(d)(1), 4995, 4997(b), and 7805 of title 26 of the United States Code and section 101 of the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 [Pub. L. 96-223, 1980-3 C.B. 2].

(iii) the Board, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, is able to establish a procedure which will prevent the purchaser (who buys the building from the builder) of a residential building for which a builder received financial assistance under this subtitle from receiving additional assistance under this subtitle for the same expenditures for which the builder received assistance and from being allowed a credit against taxes under section 38 or section 44C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for such expenditures;

(2) Any expenditures, made by a builder for the purchase and installation of a solar energy system in a building, for which the builder received financial assistance under this subtitle shall be considered expenditures from subsidized energy financing by the purchaser (who buys such building from the builder) for purposes of section 38 and section 44C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

[229] Tax Status (Sec. 155)

Section 155(a) provides that the Corporation, its franchise, capital, reserve, surplus, income and intangible property shall be exempt from all Federal, State and local taxes, except that (1) any real property owned in fee by the Corporation shall be subject to nondiscriminatory State and local taxes to the same extent as other similarly situated and used property; and (2) its employees shall be subject to any non-discriminatory payroll and employment tax levied for the purpose of employee benefits and to the same extent as any privately owned corporation. In addition, the Corporation construction projects shall be subject to any non-discriminatory tax levied or imposed by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority on those assets of the Corporation construction project pursuant to Subtitle E, including only

(i) the extraction or severance of minerals owned or leased by the Corporation, and

(ii) on the purchase or lease of tangible personal property.

Subsection 155(b)

Section 155(b) establishes debt obligations the Federal tax policy to be followed for Federal taxation of gross income from State and local bonds, which are guaranteed by the Corporation pursuant to Section 133 or which are secured by financial assistance from the Corporation pursuant to Subtitle D during Phase I. The interest paid on any such State or local loan or debt obligations issued after the enactment of this Title is to be included in the gross income of obligation purchasers to the extent that such obligations are not supported by the full faith and credit as a general obligation of the issuer. Because it is anticipated that the taxation of this interest will impose additional costs on issuers than would otherwise be paid in connection with tax-exempt issuances, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to determine, and the Corporation is authorized to pay an interest differential payment to issuers for the purpose of compensation for these increased costs incurred as the consequence of taxable status of interest on the obligations. In calculating the amount of the payment which may be made respecting each specific issue of obligation, the Secretary of the Treasury shall take into account the interest which would have been paid if the obligations were issued as tax exempt obligations, and the interest rate actually paid on the taxable obligations.

A price support commitment from the Corporation may be used for a project financed tax exempt bond if, but only if, there is no pledge of the price support commitment as security for the bonds. It is the intention of the Conference Committee that a bond be considered secured by a price support and thus taxable if the bondholders are given a pledge of the price support payments which would entitle the bondholders to receive the prize support payments prior to any other creditors of the owners and/or operators of the facility subject to the price support payments. Where bondholders have rights [230] to the price support payments only as general creditors of the owners or operators of the facility, the Conference Committee does not intend that such bonds be deemed to be "otherwise secured" and thus taxable under Section 155(b).

In order that this interest differential payment authority shall not have the effect of encouraging applicants to seek project financing through State and local governments or agencies, the Conferees intend that the Corporation will exercise this payment authority only where there are clear public benefits to be derived from a project in excess of the benefits which would be derived if the pyament were not made. The Conferees do not expect the Corporation to make extensive use of this payment provision. Nor is it expected that the full amount of the interest differential will be paid in all cases. Further, the Conferees direct the Corporation to assure in each instance that the entire value of the payment will be used to reduce the debt service cost of the project.

Section 545 provides that any subsidy provided to a customer by a utility's financing program for residential energy conservation measures shall not be treated as income or as an increase in the basis of the customer's residence for tax purposes.

The conferees intend that any financial assistance which is provided to a customer by a utility for residential energy conservation measures and which does not include Federal, State or local governmental financial assistance (such as assistance from the Solar Energy and Energy Conservation Bank) shall not be considered subsidized energy financing for the purposes of the Internal Revenue Code, and shall not, therefore, disqualify such a customer from receiving the relevant tax credits for expenditures so financed.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

Tax Shelters; Practice Before the Service—Comments

Announcement 80-129 [1]

TITLE 31.—MONEY AND FINANCE, PART 10.—PRACTICE BEFORE THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE.

AGENCY: Department of the Treasury.

ACTION: Invitation for public comments on proposed rule.

SUMMARY: Treasury is * * * releasing for public comment a proposed rule that would amend regulations governing practice before the Internal Revenue Service * * * to set standards for the providing of opinions used in the promotion of tax shelters. The proposed rule would require a practitioner who provides an opinion for a tax shelter to exercise due diligence in representing the facts and Federal tax aspects of the transaction, and in assuring that the opinion is accurately and clearly described in any discussion of tax aspects appearing in the offering materials. The proposed rule would allow a practitioner to provide an opinion for a tax shelter only if the opinion concluded that it was more likely than not that the bulk of the tax shelter had been promoted are allowable under the tax law.

DATES: Comments must be in writing and must be received on or before November 3, 1980. No hearing is now contemplated but one may be held at a time and place to be set in a later notice in the Federal Register if requested by an interested person desiring an opportunity to comment orally and raising an issue that requires oral amplification. The effective date of the regulation will be the date of publication of final regulations in the Federal Register.

ADDRESSES: Comments should be sent in triplicate to Director of Practice, Department of the Treasury, Washington, D.C. 20220. All comments received will be available for public inspection and copying in the Treasury Library, 15th and Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT:

Mr. Leslie S. Shapiro, Director of Practice—(202) 376-0767.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

The proposed rule which Treasury is * * * releasing for public comment sets standards for IRS practitioners in providing opinions used in the promotion of tax shelters.

Abusive tax shelters are one of the Internal Revenue Service's most serious compliance problems. The IRS has identified approximately 25,000 abusive tax shelters promoted in recent years, involving 190,000 returns and $5.1 billion in adjustments.[1] Apart from the loss in revenue, the widespread nature of such schemes undermines the public's confidence in the fairness of the tax system and may affect the level of voluntary compliance.

A critical element in the typical promotion of an abusive tax shelter is the tax opinion generally provided by the promoter's attorney.[2] The theory of the tax shelter promoter appears to be that the tax opinion, even if qualified or simply incorrect, may provide the investor with assurance that penalties will not be assessed even if deductions and credits taken by the taxpayer are subsequently disallowed. Moreover, promoters also appear to hope that investors will view the practitioner's willingness to provide an opinion, even when the opinion is frankly pessimistic about the chances of ultimately obtaining the promised tax benefits or simply does not purport to address key tax aspects, as an endorsement of the tax shelter.

Four categories of opinions have been identified as causing problems: (1) the opinion that is intentionally false, incompetent, or knowingly or recklessly misstates the law or the facts; (2) the opinion that purports to rely upon factual representations of the promoter even where certain critical facts are questionable in light of other facts and circumstances of the transaction; (3) the opinion that never actually comes to a conclusion on the tax aspects raised by the particular offering to which it is attached. Variants on this include the opinion based on hypothetical facts and the opinion addressing some but not all key aspects; (4) the opinion which states that there is a "reasonable basis" for a taxpayer's claiming the tax benefits on the basis of which the shelter is promoted, but indicating, explicitly or implicitly, that if challenged, the taxpayer probably would ultimately lose.

The Bar has increasingly worried about the providing of these types of opinions, in part because such opinions put significant and unhealthy pressure on the careful practitioner. Such a practitioner may be faced with the unpleasant task of explaining to a client why tax benefits promised in an abusive tax shelter cannot properly be taken even though an opinion by another attorney appears to indicate that they can be taken. The careful practitioner may be offered a substantial fee for an opinion, even if elaborately qualified, which the practitioner knows another will give if he or she does not. There have been suggestions that Treasury amend Circular 230 [1966-2 C.B. 1171; 1967-1 C.B. 433; 1970-2 C.B. 644] to provide clear and effective guidance with respect to the providing of tax shelter opinions. Indeed, at its June 9, 1980 meeting the Commissioner's Advisory Group urged such an amendment.

[1] Filed by the Office of the Federal Register on Sept. 3, 1980, 8:45 a.m., and published in the issue of the Federal Register for Sept. 4, 1980, 45 F.R. 58594.

[1] Not all tax shelters are abusive. An "abusive" tax shelter may be generally described as a transaction without any significant economic purpose other than the generation of tax benefits that typically employs exaggerated valuations and otherwise mischaracterizes critical aspects of the transaction.

[2] Although the discussion is cast in terms of attorney's opinions, much of the analysis would apply to opinions rendered by certified public accountants and others entitled to practice before the IRS. The rule covers all such practitioners.

Under the authority conferred by 31 U.S.C. 1026 and 5 U.S.C. 301 to regulate the professional conduct of those who practice before it, Treasury proposes to adopt a rule that would confront the problem of tax attorney opinions in abusive tax shelters by imposing certain duties upon a practitioner providing a tax shelter opinion.

Scope of the Rule

With one exception, the proposed rule is drawn to apply only to "tax shelter opinions." [3] These are opinions that the practitioner who provides the opinion knows or should know will be "referred to or included in offering materials distributed to parties who are not then [the practitioner's] clients in connection with the promotion of a tax shelter." The proposed rule is not directed at the advice which a tax practitioner gives his or her client. Nor is it intended to deal with the problem addressed in Formal Opinion 314 of the American Bar Association of whether an attorney who is asked to advise his or her client in the course of the preparation of the client's tax returns may freely urge the statement of positions most favorable to the client as long as there is a reasonable basis for those positions.

"Tax shelter" is defined in the proposed rule in terms of transactions "in which the claimed tax benefits are likely to be perceived by the taxpayer as the principal reason for his or her participation." Consideration was given to defining a "tax shelter" in terms of transactions "in which the claimed tax benefits are set forth in the offering materials or otherwise described as a principal reason for the taxpayer's participation," but limiting coverage of the rule to a subset of tax shelters particularly likely to be abusive. Such shelters might be defined as those in which "it is contemplated that the aggregate deductions, credits, and other allowances that a taxpayer may claim within 24 months of his or her initial cash outlay will equal or exceed the amount of such cash outlay (disregarding any cash to be obtained by borrowings, except full-recourse borrowings from financial institutions unrelated to the taxpayer, promoter, or other participants)." Treasury encourages comment on this alternative approach to the definition of tax shelter.

Due Diligence in the Providing of Tax Shelter Opinions

A. Due Diligence as to Factual Matters

Proposed Section 10.33(a)(1)(i) requires the practitioner who provides a tax shelter opinion to exercise "due diligence" to assure that the opinion (or offering material) adequately discloses those facts which bear significantly on each important Federal tax aspect of the shelter. A tax shelter opinion should be based upon the actual facts of the transaction. Thus a tax shelter opinion that relied on hypothetical facts in arriving at its conclusions would not be acceptable. Such an opinion too readily lends itself to abuse in a tax shelter promotion.

What constitutes "due diligence" in assuring the accuracy of facts depends on the circumstances. Due diligence ordinarily includes the duty to examine any offering materials and to be satisfied that the facts upon which the opinion is based are accurate and complete. "Due diligence" requires the practitioner to be alert to inconsistencies or implausibilities in the facts as presented to him or her and to resolve any doubts before rendering an opinion.

For example, if the offering materials refer to an appraisal of property to be acquired by an investor, the practitioner should ordinarily review the appraisal and the appraiser's credentials and consider whether the terms and conditions on which the property will be sold are consistent with the purported valuation. If doubts about valuation cannot be resolved to the practitioner's satisfaction, the practitioner should not provide an opinion.

B. Due Diligence as to Tax Law Matters

Proposed Section 10.33(a)(1)(ii) generally requires the practitioner who provides a tax shelter opinion to use "due diligence" to assure that the opinion adequately describes and sets forth a conclusion with respect to each important Federal tax aspect of the transaction. In the opinion the practitioner must state a conclusion as to likely legal outcomes. An opinion that merely presents opposing views or merely states that there is a "reasonable basis" for a particular view without assessing the likely legal outcome does not meet the standard of the proposed rule.

However, in rare cases, e.g., an inability to predict legal results because of internal inconsistency in a statute or inconsistency between literal statutory language and the overall legislative scheme, and the absence of helpful IRS regulations or case law, good professional practice may dictate that it would be inappropriate to set forth a conclusion as to a particular Federal tax aspect. When a practitioner can demonstrate the existence of such circumstances, a conclusion as to likely legal outcome will not be required as to that tax aspect. The phrase in proposed paragraph (a)(i)(ii), "unless inappropriate under good professional practice," is intended to accomplish this result. This provision in no way modifies the requirement in proposed paragraph (a)(2) that a practitioner may provide a tax shelter opinion only if he or she concludes that it is more likely than not that the bulk of the benefits on the basis of which the shelter has been promoted are allowable under the tax law.

Under the definition of "important Federal tax aspect" proposed in paragraph (c)(4), the practitioner is required to give an opinion on all tax benefits on the basis of which the tax shelter is promoted. Moreover, there may be some Federal tax aspects which are significant in relation to the total tax benefits which may be claimed from the shelter that are not discussed or emphasized in the offering materials. For example, frequently offering materials do not discuss the consequences of recapture of tax benefits obtained, which may result in adverse tax consequences so substantial as to constitute an important Federal tax aspect. The practitioner must address such issues, as "important Federal tax aspects," in the opinion.

[3] As a clarification of Section 10.51, the providing of an intentionally or recklessly false opinion, or a pattern of providing incompetent opinions in Federal tax matters (not just in tax shelters), is specifically identified as an instance of disreputable conduct.

In certain circumstances a practitioner may be asked or may request to provide an opinion on some but not all of the important Federal tax aspects. For example, a practitioner with a very specific speciality may not want to opine on a broad range of issues. Paragraph (b)(1) permits a practitioner to provide an opinion in such circumstances if opinions by other practitioners fill in the gaps. The other opinions must be disseminated in the same way as the practitioner's. This includes, for example, discussion in the offering materials if the practitioner's opinion is discussed there. Additionally, the practitioner, upon reviewing the other opinions, and the offering materials, must have no reason to believe that the requirements of adequate factual and legal disclosure have been violated in connection with such other opinions. The required review calls for at least a careful reading, but, in the absence of significant differences with the practitioner's view of the law or discrepancies with the practitioner's knowledge of the facts, does not entail an audit of legal or factual conclusions in the other opinions.

C. Due Diligence as to Description in Offering Materials

Proposed Section 10.33(a)(1)(iii) requires the practitioner who provides a tax shelter opinion to exercise "due diligence" to assure that the opinion is adequately described in any discussion of tax aspects appearing in any offering materials. A practitioner ordinarily has control over the use to which his or her opinion may be put and thus has the responsibility to take reasonable steps (such as insisting on a review of offering materials) to assure that the opinion is accurately and clearly described.

D. Due Diligence Generally

"Due diligence" is a concept which is defined to a substantial extent by the standards prevalent in good professional practice. Thus Treasury particularly welcomes comment by professional groups, including opinions by ethics committees, as to their views of what constitutes due diligence in a variety of circumstances. Standards of practice agreed on by recognized professional groups will be an important factor in guiding Treasury enforcement activity in this area.

"More Likely Than Not" Standard for Providing Opinions

Proposed Section 10.33(a)(2) allows the practitioner to provide a tax shelter opinion only if the opinion concludes that it is "more likely than not" that the bulk of the tax benefits on the basis of which the shelter has been promoted are allowable under the tax law. The proposed rule requires only a statement of the opinion of the practitioner as to his or her view of the law. A practitioner is entitled to disagree with the position of the Internal Revenue Service, so long as he or she honestly believes the courts would ultimately sustain the position he or she advises. It should be noted, however, that an opinion which is intentionally or recklessly misleading, or which is part of a pattern of providing incompetent opinions, will be regarded as an instance of disreputable conduct under Section 10.51. This is made clear by proposed Section 10.51(j). An opinion that reaches a conclusion with which no reasonable practitioner could concur is likely to be either intentionally or recklessly misleading.

The "bulk of the tax benefits" language is not a precise directive, but it means substantially more than 51%. The term also indicates a rejection of a possible alternative of requiring a positive conclusion for each important Federal tax aspect. What constitutes the "bulk of the tax benefits" will frequently become apparent from the substance of a particular transaction and its presentation in offering materials. For example, in a tax shelter promising deductions, credits, and other allowances in a ratio of 5 to 1 of the investor's initial cash outlay, a conclusion that it is more likely than not that a 4 to 1 ratio will be allowable meets the standards of paragraph (a)(2).

Also, in some circumstances a practitioner who has properly provided an opinion on just some of the important Federal tax aspects may not be able to determine whether the "more likely than not" test can be met for the "bulk of the tax benefits." To avoid needless duplication of work, under paragraph (b)(2) the practitioner may provide an opinion if another opinion, upon which he or she has properly relied for purposes of paragraph (b)(1), meets the test of paragraph (a)(2). The practitioner may also rely on conclusions in such other opinions to provide an opinion complying with paragraph (a)(2). Thus at least one practitioner must ultimately review all important Federal tax aspects of a tax shelter and conclude that the test of paragraph (a)(2) has been met.

Special Disclosure Alternative

The rule of paragraph (a)(2) constitutes a significant step in the regulation of tax practitioners. For example, present professional practice standards indicate that a tax practitioner can properly advise a client to take a deduction with respect to a consummated transaction so long as the practitioner in good faith believes there is a reasonable basis for such a position, even though he or she also believes that the deduction would ultimately be disallowed. ABA Opinion 314.

The theory of paragraph (a)(2) is that tax practitioners have greater responsibility when their opinions are used to help merchandise an investment proposal to persons who are not their clients.[4] The prohibition of paragraph (a)(2) also recognizes that, in contrast to the Securities and Exchange Commission's primary concern with investor protection in tax shelter promotions, the Treasury is primarily concerned about the possible defrauding of the Government. In many tax shelter promotions the true victim is the Treasury. Investors seek to evade their fair share of the taxes, and disclaimers as to the weakness of the scheme may not sufficiently deter the successful promotion of these ventures. An effective deterrent may be to forbid participation by tax practitioners because their participation suggests their endorsement of the promotion. A prohibition also eliminates use of the opinion as insurance against fraud or negligence penalties if the benefits are ultimately disallowed.

[4] The proposed rule takes no position on a tax practitioner's responsibility in tax planning for his or her client, where the practitioner may be called on to structure a transaction to obtain certain tax benefits which he or she believes would ultimately be disallowed but as to which there is a reasonable basis.

On the other hand, some thoughtful practitioners have argued that there is nothing unprofessional or disreputable in a tax practitioner permitting the circulation of a competent opinion which sets forth the risks that the proposed tax shelter will not provide the hoped for benefits, especially if adequate disclosure is made of the negative aspects of the opinion. The following language has been suggested as a possible way of meeting this point:

"(c) Special Disclosure. A practitioner may provide a tax shelter opinion that does not comply with paragraph (a)(2) hereunder if the risks of not obtaining tax benefits are clearly and forcefully explained in the opinion and if he or she exercises due diligence to assure that such explanation appears in any materials used to promote the tax shelter. A clear and forceful explanation normally would include a highlighted statement on the first page of any offering materials, the first page of the practitioner's opinion, and at the head of any other discussion of tax aspects in the offering materials that it is 'unlikely that the bulk of the tax benefits on the basis of this tax shelter transaction is promoted are allowable under the tax law' ".

The proposed rule has not adopted this suggestion because tax shelter opinions not meeting the standards of paragraph (a)(2) are inherently subject to abuse. A promoter who would use a negative opinion as part of the offering materials is expecting investors either not to read the opinion, not to understand the opinion, or to view it as insurance against the imposition of penalties if the claimed tax benefits are ultimately disallowed. The disclosure alternative does not appear adequately to respond to these concerns. Comment is specifically invited on the issues raised by the disclosure alternative.

OTHER

A proposed amendment to Section 10.51 will make clear what is already implied by that section, that the providing of intentionally or recklessly false opinions, or a pattern of providing incompetent opinions in Federal tax matters (not just tax shelter matters) is an instance of disreputable conduct.

A proposed amendment to Section 10.52 will allow disbarment or suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service for violation of proposed Section 10.33 and Sections 10.22 and 10.50. The standard of these sections make the requirement of willfulness in present Section 10.52 inappropriate.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal draftsman is Jeffrey N. Gordon, special assistant to the General Counsel of the Treasury.

AUTHORITY

These rules and amendments are proposed under authority of Sec. 3, 23 Stat. 258, secs. 2-12, 60 Stat. 237 et seq.; 5 U.S.C. 301; 31 U.S.C. 1026; Reorg. Plan No. 26 of 1950, 15 F.R. 4935, 65 Stat. 1280, 3 CFR, 1949-53 Comp., p. 1017.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE REGULATIONS

In consideration of the foregoing, it is proposed to amend Part 10 of 31 CFR by adding a new Section 10.33, by adding a new Section 10.51(j), and by revising existing Section 10.52 as follows:

Section 10.33. Tax Shelter Opinions.

(a) General Rule. A practitioner who provides a tax shelter opinion

(1) shall exercise due diligence to assure that

(i) the opinion or the offering material fully and fairly discloses those facts which bear significantly on each important Federal tax aspect and

(ii) the opinion fully and fairly describes and, unless inappropriate under good professional practice, states a conclusion as to the likely legal outcome with respect to each important Federal tax aspect, and

(iii) the opinion is accurately and clearly described in any discussion of tax aspects appearing in any offering materials and

(2) shall provide the opinion only if the opinion concludes that it is more likely than not that the bulk of the tax benefits on the basis of which the shelter has been promoted are allowable under the tax law.

(b) Reliance on Other Opinions. (1) Notwithstanding paragraph (a)(1)(ii), a practitioner may provide an opinion on fewer than all of the important Federal tax aspects if

(i) other practitioners provide opinions on the other important Federal tax aspects which are disseminated in the same manner as the practitioner's opinion, and

(ii) the practitioner, upon reviewing such other opinions and any offering materials, has no reason to believe that the standards set forth in paragraph (a)(1) have been violated.

(2) In providing an opinion under paragraph (b)(1), the practitioner is not required to comply with paragraph (a)(2) if at least one other opinion properly relied upon for purposes of paragraph (b)(1) satisfies the standard of paragraph (a)(2).

(3) In providing an opinion under paragraph (b)(1) that also seeks to meet the standard of paragraph (a)(2), the practitioner may rely on conclusions in opinions properly relied upon for purposes of paragraph (b)(1).

(c) Definitions. For purposes of Section 10.33:

(1) "Practitioner" is any person authorized under Section 10.3 to practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

(2) "Tax shelter" is a sale, offering, syndication, promotion, investment or other transaction in which the claimed tax benefits are likely to be perceived by the taxpayer as the principal reason for his or her participation.

(3) "Tax shelter opinion" is written advice relating to the Federal tax law which the practitioner providing such advice knows or reasonably should know will be referred to or included in offering materials distributed to parties who are not then his or her clients in connection with the promotion of a tax shelter.

(4) "Important Federal tax aspect" is any Federal tax aspect on the basis of which the tax shelter is promoted in whole or in part or which is significant in relation to the total tax benefits which may be claimed from the tax shelter. Frequently the recapture of tax benefits obtained may result in adverse tax consequences so substantial as to constitute an important Federal tax aspect.

Section 10.51. Disreputable Conduct.

(j) Giving an intentionally or recklessly misleading opinion, or a pattern of providing incompetent opinions, on questions arising under the Federal tax laws.

Section 10.52. Violation of Regulations.

In addition to the grounds set forth in Section 10.51, any attorney, certified public accountant, or enrolled agent or other eligible individual may be disbarred or suspended from practice before the Internal Revenue Service for violation of Sections 10.22, 10.33, or 10.50 or for willful violation of any of the other regulations contained in this part.

Deletions from Cumulative List of Organizations Contributions to Which Are Deductible Under Section 170 of the Code

Announcement 80-131

The name of an organization that no longer qualifies as an organization contributions to which are deductible under section 170 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is listed below.

Generally, the Service will not disallow deductions for contributions made to a listed organization on or before the date of announcement in the Internal Revenue Bulletin that the organization no longer qualifies. However, the Service is not precluded from disallowing a deduction for any contributions made after an organization ceases to qualify under section 170 where the contributor (1) had knowledge of the revocation of the ruling or determination letter, (2) was aware that such revocation was imminent, or (3) was in part responsible for or was aware of, the activities or deficiencies on the part of the organization which gave rise to the loss of qualification.

Moreover, if the Service has announced suspension of advance assurance of deductibility of contributions to an organization pending examination, and the qualification of the organization is subsequently terminated, contributions made after the date specified in the announcement in the Internal Revenue Bulletin are not deductible. In such a case the date of suspension will appear after the name of the organization to which it applies.

U.S.-Australia Tax Treaty Discussions

Announcement 80-135 [1]

The Treasury Department has announced that representatives of the United States and Australia will meet in Canberra in November to resume discussions on a new income tax treaty to replace the present treaty which has been in effect since 1953.

Negotiations on a new treaty began in 1970 and continued in 1971. It was not possible at that time to resolve all of the issues, and negotiations lapsed. On the basis of several informal discussions in the last few years, full agreement now appears promising.

The new treaty will be patterned after the U.S. and OECD Model Conventions of 1977. It will deal with the taxation of business income, investment income, and personal service income and with administration of the treaty.

The Treasury invites persons wishing to submit comments or suggestions on any aspect of the proposed treaty or on U.S.-Australian tax relations generally to write, by October 31, 1980, to H. David Rosenbloom, International Tax Counsel, Department of the Treasury, Room 3064, Washington, D.C. 20220.

Dated September 15, 1980.

Donald C. Lubick,
Assistant Secretary
(Tax Policy).

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Stock redeemed for property; liabilities in excess of basis. Computation of gain to be recognized under section 311(c) of the Code on a corporation's distribution of property with respect to its stock is made on an individual, asset-by-asset basis rather than on an aggregate basis. This application is illustrated by various situations in which such distributions are made in complete termination of a shareholder's interest in the corporation.

Rev. Rul. 80-284, page 8.
Transfer to controlled corporation; continuity of interest. Section 351(a) of the Code does not apply to an individual's exchange of the 14 percent of the stock of a corporation owned by the individual for the preferred stock of a newly formed subsidiary of another corporation as part of a plan for the subsidiary's parent to acquire all the stock of the first corporation.

Transfer to controlled corporation; continuity of interest. Section 351(a) of the Code does not apply to a corporation's transfer of all its assets to a newly organized corporation for securities and all the voting preferred stock of the new corporation as part of a plan of the new corporation's parent to acquire all the assets of the first corporation.

Foreign tax credit limitation; allocation of expenses to income source. A domestic corporation that operates domestic oil refineries and an unrelated worldwide wholesale business purchases and refines its own crude oil and sells the refined oil products in the U.S. and abroad. For purposes of computing the foreign tax credit limitation, expenses incurred in preparing certain refinery reports required by federal law must be allocated to a class of income that consists of both U.S. and foreign source income from the sale of the refined oil products. If the corporation does not sell refined oil outside the U.S., the expenses would be allocable to a class of income that consists solely of U.S. source income from the sale of the corporation's refined oil products.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Announcement Relating to Decisions of the Tax Court

It is the policy of the Internal Revenue Service to announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin at the earliest practicable date the determination of the Commissioner to acquiesce or not acquiesce in a decision of the Tax Court which disallows a deficiency in tax determined by the Commissioner to be due.

Notice that the Commissioner has acquiesced or nonacquiesced in a decision of the Tax Court relates only to the issue or issues decided adversely to the Government.

Actions of acquiescences in adverse decisions shall be relied on by revenue officers and others concerned as conclusions of the Service only to the application of the law to the facts in the particular case. Caution should be exercised in extending the application of the decision to a similar case unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, and consideration should be given to the effect of new legislation, regulations, and rulings as well as subsequent court decisions and actions thereon.

Acquiescence in a decision means acceptance by the Service of the conclusion reached, and does not necessarily mean acceptance and approval of any or all of the reasons assigned by the court for its conclusions.

No announcements are made in the Bulletin with respect to memorandum opinions of the tax court.

The announcements published in the weekly Internal Revenue Bulletins are consolidated semiannually and annually. The semiannual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for July and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the first half of the year and the annual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for the following January and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the last half of the year.

The Commissioner ACQUIESCES in the following decisions:

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 170.—Charitable, Etc., Contributions and Gifts

26 CFR 1.170A-1: Charitable, etc., contributions and gifts; allowance of deduction.

Whether and to what extent payments to an organization that operates an exchange program for children of the United States and a foreign country qualify as charitable contributions. See Rev. Rul. 80-286, page 11.

Section 302.—Distributions in Redemption of Stock

26 CFR 1.302-4: Termination of shareholder's interest.

Whether Y's distribution of Z securities to its public shareholders in exchange for all of their Y stock qualifies as a complete termination under section 302(b)(3) of the Code. See Rev. Rul. 80-285, page 9.

Section 311.—Taxability of Corporation on Distribution

26 CFR 1.311-1: General.

Stock redeemed for property; liabilities in excess of basis. Computation of gain to be recognized under section 311(c) of the Code on a corporation's distribution of property with respect to its stock is made on an individual, asset-by-asset basis rather than on an aggregate basis. This application is illustrated by various situations in which such distributions are made in complete termination of a shareholder's interest in the corporation.

Rev. Rul. 80-283

ISSUE

Does section 311(c) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to distributed assets individually or in the aggregate in the situations described below?

FACTS

Situation 1:

Individuals A and B owned equally all the outstanding stock of X corporation. In a redemption qualifying under section 302(b)(3) of the Code, A's interest in X was completely terminated. As consideration for the surrender of stock, X distributed to A two items of property: property I having an adjusted basis of 200*x* dollars and a fair market value of 400*x* dollars and property II having an adjusted basis of 300*x* dollars and a fair market value of 600*x* dollars. A mortgage encumbering property I to the extent of 250*x* dollars was assumed by A in connection with the distribution. In light of the complete termination exception of section 311(d)(2)(A), section 311(d)(1), relating to redemptions using appreciated property, has no application here.

Situation 2:

The facts are identical to those in Situation 1 except that the assumed liability of 250*x* dollars does not specifically encumber either of the distributed assets.

Situation 3:

The facts are identical to those in Situation 1 except that A assumes, in addition to the 250*x* dollar mortgage encumbering property I, an additional liability of 250*x* dollars that does not specifically encumber either of the distributed assets.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1.311-1(d) of the Income Tax Regulations provides, in part, that if the distributed property subject to a liability is not a capital asset in the hands of the distributing corporation, the gain is taxable as gain from the sale of a noncapital asset. Because characterization of the recognized gain is thus to be done on an asset by asset basis, it is reasonable to infer that Congress intended computation of such gain to be done on that basis as well.

A similar inference can be drawn from section 357(c). That provision, like section 311(c), became law as part of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Furthermore, section 357(c) also provides for gain recognition when liabilities associated with transferred property exceed the basis of that property. Unlike section 311(c), however, section 357(c) confronts and resolves the question of individual or aggregate by specifying that > [i]f the sum of the amount of the liabilities assumed, plus the amount of the liabilities to which the property is subject, exceeds the total of the adjusted basis of the property transferred . . ., then the excess shall be considered as a gain . . . (Emphasis added.)

See Treas. Reg. § 1.357-2(a). Consequently, given the simultaneous enactment and similar mechanics of the two sections, it can be inferred that Congress, in omitting such language from section 311(c), was manifesting its intention that the contrary or asset by asset approach be used.

Accordingly, the computation of gain under section 311(c) should be done on an asset by asset basis. Furthermore, so that this approach may be consistently applied, liabilities assumed in connection with section 311(c) distributions but not related to any of the distributed property should be allocated among all such property according to relative fair market value. Compare Rev. Rul. 55-79, 1955-1 C.B. 370.

HOLDINGS

Situation 1:

X has a recognizable gain of 50*x* dollars under section 311(c). This represents the excess of the 250*x* dollar mortgage assumed by A over the 200*x* dollar adjusted basis of property I in the hands of X.

Situation 2:

X has no recognizable gain under section 311(c). Since 400*x* dollars, or 40 percent of the total fair market value of 1,000*x* dollars, is attributable to property I, 40 percent of the unrelated liability of 250*x* dollars, or 100*x* dollars, is allocable to that property and 60 percent, or 150*x* dollars, to property II. Therefore, with respect to both properties, adjusted basis exceeds the allocated liability and no gain results.

Situation 3:

X has a recognizable gain of 150*x* dollars under section 311(c). The liability allocation under Situation 2 is combined with the specific encumbrance of Situation 1 to give property

I a total computation liability of 350*x* dollars (100*x* dollars plus 250*x* dollars). The distribution thus results in a 150*x* gain to X (350*x* dollars liability less 200*x* dollars adjusted basis) with respect to property I and no gain to X (300*x* dollars adjusted basis less 150*x* dollars liabiilty) with respect to property II.

Section 351.—Transfer to Corporation Controlled by Transferor

26 CFR 1.351-1: Transfer of corporation controlled by transferor.

Transfer to controlled corporation; continuity of interest. Section 351(a) of the Code does not apply to an individual's exchange of the 14 percent of the stock of a corporation owned by the individual for the preferred stock of a newly formed subsidiary of another corporation as part of a plan for the subsidiary's parent to acquire all the stock of the first corporation.

Rev. Rul. 80-284

ISSUE

Will nonrecognition treatment under section 351(a) of the Internal Revenue Code be accorded to a transfer of 14 percent of the stock of a corporation (T) to another corporation (S) in exchange for S stock as part of a plan whereby S acquires the remaining 86 percent of the T stock for cash?

FACTS

T, a manufacturing corporation, had outstanding 1,000*x* shares of capital stock. The fair market value of T was 100,000*x* dollars, and the fair market value of each share of its outstanding stock was 100*x* dollars. T's president and chairman of the board, A, owned 140*x* shares of its capital stock (14 percent). The remaining 860*x* shares of T's capital stock (86 percent) were publicly held. P, a large publicly traded corporation unrelated to T, wished to purchase the stock of T and thereafter to have T's business continued by a wholly owned subsidiary. While the other shareholders of T were willing to accept cash for their T stock, A, who was of an advanced age and who had a very low basis in his 140*x* shares, was unwilling to sell the T stock for cash because the sale would result in recognition of taxable gain.

In order to accommodate A's wish to avoid recognition of gain, P and A agreed in January, 1980, to organize a new corporation, S, for the purpose of acquiring and holding all of the stock of T. Several months later, pursuant to the agreement, P transferred 86,000*x* dollars in cash together with other property to S solely in exchange for all of S's common stock, and A transferred his 140*x* shares of T stock to S solely in exchange for all of S's preferred stock. It was intended that this transaction would be a tax-free exchange under section 351(a) of the Code. Thereafter, and as part of the overall plan, S organized a new corporation, D, by transferring the 86,000*x* dollars in cash to D solely in exchange for all of D's stock. D was then merged into T under applicable state law, and pursuant thereto each share of T stock, except those shares transferred by A to S, was surrendered in exchange for 100*x* dollars in cash. The T stock acquired by D for cash was cancelled and, pursuant to state law, each share of D stock was converted into stock of T. Although S could theoretically have acquired the remaining 86 percent of the T stock directly from the T shareholders for cash, the acquisition was made pursuant to the state merger laws because this method was more expeditious and convenient. T remains in existence as an operating company, and S remains in existence as a holding company.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 351(a) of the Code provides that no gain or loss is recognized if persons who control a corporation transfer property to the corporation solely in exchange for stock or securities. Section 351(a) is an exception to the general rule that gain or loss must be recognized on any sale or exchange of property. See section 1.1002-1(b) of the Income Tax Regulations, which states that exceptions to the general rule (including section 351(a)) "are strictly construed and do not extend either beyond the words or the underlying assumptions and purposes of the exception. Nonrecognition is accorded by the Code only if the exchange is one which satisfies both (1) the specific description in the Code of an excepted exchange, and (2) the underlying purpose for which such exchange is excepted from the general rule."

Thus, while A's exchange of common stock for preferred stock may satisfy all of the literal requirements of section 351 of the Code, it does not follow that Congress meant to cover such an exchange, even though "the facts answer the dictionary definition of each term used in the statute." See Helvering v. Gregory, 69 F.2d 809, 810 (2nd Cir. 1934) (Hand, J.), aff'd, 293 U.S. 465 (1935), Ct. D. 911, XIV-1 C.B. 193 (1935).

Section 351(a) of the Code is intended to apply to "certain transactions where gain or loss may have accrued in a constitutional sense, but where in a popular and economic sense there has been a mere change in the form of ownership and the taxpayer has not really 'cashed in' on the theoretical gain, or closed out a losing venture." Portland Oil Co. v. Commissioner, 109 F.2d 479, 488 (1st Cir. 1940), cert. denied, 310 U.S. 650 (1940). See also Rev. Rul. 73-472, 1973-2 C.B. 114. On the other hand, section 351(a) is not intended to apply to transactions that sufficiently resemble a sale so that gain is recognized in a popular and economic sense. Thus, the issue presented is whether, in terms of economic substance, there has been a mere change in the form of investment or a cashing in of that investment.

A's exchange of common stock for preferred stock is an integral part of a larger transaction. In the larger transaction, P, acting through its subsidiary S, acquires all the stock of an unrelated third corporation T. Thus, viewed from the perspective of all the parties, the larger transaction fits a pattern common to acquisitive reorganizations. Contrast Rev. Rul. 57-190, 1957-1 C.B. 121, and Rev. Rul. 57-464, 1957-2 C.B. 244 (which describe transfers to a controlled corporation as part of a larger transaction that fits a pattern common to divisive reorganizations).

A well-established continuity of interest test applies to acquisitive reorganizations. See section 1.368-1(b) of the Regulations and Rev. Rul. 66-224, 1966-2 C.B. 114. The object of the continuity of interest test is to identify acquisitive transactions that sufficiently resemble a sale so gain is recognized in the ordinary business sense. See Roebling v. Commissioner, 143 F.2d 810, 812 (3rd Cir. 1944), cert. denied, 323 U.S. 773 (1944).

Under the continuity of interest test, a substantial portion of the consideration paid must consist of stock in the acquiring corporation. See Southwest Natural Gas Co. v. Commissioner, 189 F.2d 332, 334 (5th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 860 (1951). If an acquisitive transaction fails the continuity of interest test, then the transaction as a whole sufficiently resembles a sale so all the parties recognize gain in the ordinary business sense.

The larger acquisitive transaction in which S obtains the stock of T fails the continuity of interest test. It follows that the transaction as a whole sufficiently resembles a sale so all the parties (including A) recognize gain in the ordinary business sense. Because section 351 of the Code is not intended to apply where gain is recognized in the ordinary business sense, A's exchange is not within the "underlying assumptions and purposes" of section 351. See section 1.1002-1(b) of the regulations.

No other conclusion would be consistent with the history and purpose of continuity of interest. In a series of decided cases, the courts have denied nonrecognition treatment to acquisitive transactions that lacked continuity of interest. See, e.g., in addition to the cases cited above, LeTulle v. Scofield, 308 U.S. 415 (1940), Ct. D. 1432, 1940-1 C.B. 151, Pinellas Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Commissioner, 287 U.S. 462 (1933), Ct. D. 630, XII-1 C.B. 161 (1933), and Cortland Speciality Co. v. Commissioner, 60 F.2d 937 (2d Cir. 1932), cert. denied, 288 U.S. 599 (1933). The defect in each case was entirely one of substance; the transaction at issue satisfied all of the technical requirements for nonrecognition under the satutory provisions that were directly relevant. A defect of this kind cannot be remedied by means that are essentially formal. In particular it cannot be remedied merely by rearranging the form of an acquisitive transaction so that the technical requirements of section 351 of the Code are satisfied, but without altering the substance of the transaction.

In this ruling, the facts reveal an acquisitive transaction which does not meet the continuity of interest test and thus is equivalent to a sale. Accordingly, although the technical requirements of section 351(a) of the Code are satisfied, the transaction is beyond the underlying assumptions and purposes of section 351(a). Therefore, its substance as a sale remains the same, and the transaction will be treated as a taxable exchange. Compare Rev. Rul. 80-285, this page, this Bulletin, which reaches the same result when assets, instead of stock, are acquired under similar circumstances.

HOLDING

A's exchange of capital stock in T for preferred stock in S does not qualify for nonrecognition treatment under section 351(a) of the Code, and gain is therefore recognized on the exchange.

26 CFR 1.351-1: Transfer to corporation controlled by transferor.
(Also Section 302; 1.302-4.)

Transfer to controlled corporation; continuity of interest. Section 351(a) of the Code does not apply to a corporation's transfer of all its assets to a newly organized corporation for securities and all the voting preferred stock of the new corporation as part of a plan of the new corporation's parent to acquire all the assets of the first corporation.

Rev. Rul. 80-285

ISSUE

Will nonrecognition treatment under section 351(a) of the Internal Revenue Code be accorded to a transfer of all of the assets of a corporation (Y) to another corporation (Z) in exchange for Z stock and Z securities, where, as part of the plan, Y redeems 81 percent of its stock for the Z securities?

FACTS

Y, a manufacturing corporation, had outstanding 1,000*x* shares of capital stock. The fair market value of Y was 100,000*x* dollars, and the fair market value of each share of its outstanding stock was 100*x* dollars. Y's president and chairman of the board, A, owned 190*x* shares of its capital stock (19 percent). The remaining 810*x* shares of Y's capital stock (81 percent) were publicly held. X, a large publicly traded corporation unrelated to Y, wished to purchase all of the assets of Y and thereafter to have Y's business continued by a wholly owned subsidiary. While the other shareholders of Y were willing to accept cash or securities for their Y stock, A, who was of an advanced age and who had a very low basis in his 190*x* shares, was unwilling to sell the Y stock for cash or securities because the sale would result in recognition of taxable gain. The public shareholders of Y are unrelated to A, within the meaning of section 318 of the Code.

In order to accommodate A's wish to avoid recognition of gain, X and the Y shareholders agreed in January, 1980, to have X and Y organize a new corporation, Z, for the purpose of acquiring and holding all of the assets of Y. Several months later, pursuant to the agreement, X transferred 81,000*x* dollars in cash together with other property to Z solely in exchange for all of Z's common stock, and Y transferred all of its assets to Z solely in exchange for all of Z's voting preferred stock and Z securities. It was intended that this transaction would qualify as an exchange under section 351 of the Code. Thereafter, and as part of the overall plan, Y redeemed all of its stock (81 percent) held by its public shareholders for the Z securities. All transfers and exchanges were at fair market value. The value of the property and cash transferred by X to Z was over 80 times the value of the property transferred by Y to Z. Therefore, the Z common stock received by X in the exchange comprised over 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of Z stock entitled to vote. Z remains in existence as an operating company, and Y remains in existence as a wholly owned holding company of A. After all of the exchanges occurred, Z owned all of the assets of Y, X owned all of the Z common stock, Y owned all of the Z voting preferred stock, A owned all of the Y stock, and the Y public shareholders received all of the Z securities in exchange for their Y stock.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 351(a) of the Code provides that no gain or loss is recognized if persons who control (within the meaning of section 368(c)) a corporation transfer property to the corporation solely in exchange for stock or securities. Section 351(a) is an exception to the general rule that gain or loss must be recognized on any sale or exchange of property. See section 1.1002-1(b) of the Income Tax Regulations, which states that exceptions to the general rule (including section 351(a)) "are strictly construed and do not extend either beyond the words or the underlying assumptions and purposes of the exception. Nonrecognition is accorded by the Code only if the exchange is one which satisfies both (1) the specific description in the Code of an excepted exchange, and (2) the underlying purpose for which such exchange is excepted from the general rule."

Thus, while Y's exchange of assets for voting preferred stock and Z securities may satisfy all of the literal requirements of section 351 of the Code, it does not follow that Congress meant to cover such an exchange, even though "the facts answer the dictionary definition of each term used in the statute." See Helvering v. Gregory, 69 F.2d 809, 810 (2nd Cir. 1934) (Hand, J.), aff'd, 293 U.S. 465 (1935), Ct. D. 911, XIV-1 C.B. 193 (1935).

Section 351(a) of the Code is intended to apply to "certain transactions where gain or loss may have accrued in a constitutional sense, but where in a popular and economic sense there has been a mere change in the form of ownership and the taxpayer has not really 'cashed in' on the theoretical gain, or closed out a losing venture." Portland Oil Co. v. Commissioner, 109 F.2d 479, 488 (1st Cir. 1940), cert. denied, 310 U.S. 650 (1940). See also Rev. Rul. 73-472, 1973-2 C.B. 114. On the other hand, section 351(a) is not intended to apply to transactions that sufficiently resemble a sale so that gain is recognized in a popular and economic sense. Thus, the issue presented is whether, in terms of economic substance, there has been a mere change in the form of investment or a cashing in of that investment.

Y's transfer of assets for voting preferred stock and Z securities is an integral part of a larger transaction. In the larger transaction, X, acting through its subsidiary, Z, acquires all the assets of an unrelated third corporation, Y. Thus, viewed from the perspective of all the parties, the larger transaction fits a pattern common to acquisitive reorganizations. Contrast Rev. Rul. 57-190, 1957-1 C.B. 121, and Rev. Rul. 57-464, 1957-2 C.B. 244 (which describe transfers to a controlled corporation as part of a larger transaction that fits a pattern common to divisive reorganizations).

A well-established continuity of interest test applies to acquisitive reorganizations. See section 1.368-1(b) of the regulations and Rev. Rul. 66-224, 1966-2 C.B. 114. The object of the continuity of interest test is to identify acquisitive transactions that sufficiently resemble a sale so gain is recognized in the ordinary business sense. See Roebling v. Commissioner, 143 F.2d 810, 812 (3rd Cir. 1944), cert. denied, 323 U.S. 773 (1944).

Under the continuity of interest test, a substantial portion of the consideration paid must consist of stock in the acquiring corporation. See Southwest Natural Gas Co. v. Commissioner, 189 F.2d 332, 334 (5th Cir. 1951), cert. denied, 342 U.S. 860 (1951). If an acquisitive transaction fails the continuity of interest test, then the transaction as a whole sufficiently resembles a sale so all the parties recognize gain in the ordinary business sense.

The larger acquisitive transaction in which Z obtains all of the assets of Y, and the public shareholders receive Z securities for their 81 percent interest in Y, fails the continuity of interest test. It follows that the transaction as a whole sufficiently resembles a sale so all of the exchanging parties (including Y) recognize gain in the ordinary business sense. Because section 351 of the Code is not intended to apply where gain is recognized in the ordinary business sense, Y's exchange is not within the "underlying assumptions and purposes" of section 351. See section 1.1002-1(b) of the regulations.

No other conclusion would be consistent with the history and purpose of continuity of interest. In a series of decided cases, the courts have denied nonrecognition treatment to acquisitive transactions that lacked continuity of interest. See, e.g., in addition to the cases cited above, LeTulle v. Scofield, 308 U.S. 415 (1940), Ct. D. 1432, 1940-1 C.B. 151, Pinellas Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Commissioner, 287 U.S. 462 (1933), Ct. D. 630, XII-1 C.B. 161 (1933), and Cortland Specialty Co. v. Commissioner, 60 F.2d 937 (2nd Cir. 1932), cert. denied, 288 U.S. 599 (1933). The defect in each case was entirely one of substance; the transaction at issue satisfied all of the technical requirements for nonrecognition under the statutory provisions that were directly relevant. A defect of this kind cannot be remedied by means that are essentially formal. In particular it cannot be remedied merely by rearranging the form of an acquisitive transaction so that the technical requirements of section 351 of the Code are satisfied, but without altering the substance of the transaction.

In this ruling, the facts reveal an acquisitive transaction which does not meet the continuity of interest test and thus is equivalent to a sale. Accordingly, although the technical requirements of section 351(a) of the Code are satisfied, the transaction is beyond the underlying assumptions and purposes of section 351(a). Therefore, its substance as a sale remains the same, and the transaction will be treated as a taxable exchange. Compare Rev. Rul. 80-284, page 8, this Bulletin, which reaches the same result when stock, instead of assets, is acquired under similar circumstances.

Y redeemed its stock (within the meaning of section 317(b) of the Code) held by its public shareholders for Z securities at fair market value. Since each such shareholder's interest in Y was completely terminated, each exchange qualifies as a redemption within the meaning of section 302(b)(3). Therefore, section 302(a) applies to the gain realized on the exchange by each public shareholder. See Rev. Rul. 79-273, 1979-2 C.B. 125, for a similar result where a redemption and statutory merger are used to acquire stock.

HOLDING

Y's exchange of all of its assets for Z voting preferred stock and Z securities does not qualify for nonrecognition treatment under section 351(a) of the Code, and gain is therefore recognized on the exchange. X's exchange of cash and property for Z common stock qualifies for nonrecognition of gain or loss under section 351(a), since X controls over 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock of Z entitled to vote, and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of Z stock (since there were none), immediately after the transfer. See Rev. Rul. 68-43, 1968-1 C.B. 146.

Foreign exchange program. An otherwise qualifying organization that was formed to foster the cultural and educational development of children by arranging for and participating in the temporary exchange of children between families of a foreign country and the U.S. qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. Fees paid by the participating families equal to the cost of travel and insurance and the expenses incurred on behalf of the foreign child while living in the U.S. family's household are not charitable contributions under section 170. However, contributions from a participating family that exceed the fair market value of services received from the program are deductible. Rev. Rul. 67-327 distinguished.

Rev. Rul. 80-286

ISSUE

Does an organization that operates an exchange program for children of the United States and a foreign country, under the circumstances described below, qualify for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization, which otherwise qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, was formed in the United States to encourage and foster cultural and educational development of children by arranging for and participating in the exchange of children, on a temporary basis, between responsible families of a particular foreign country and the United States. To accomplish this purpose, the organization arranges for an American family to exchange one of its children for a child from a family that resides in the foreign country. The organization solicits applications from interested families in both countries, selects and matches qualified families, arranges for transportation to and from the respective countries, and provides a bilingual escort to travel with the children between countries. The organization interviews all applicants and selects those families for the program that can provide stable home environments and suitable cultural experiences for the children.

Families participating in the organization's exchange program are required to pay a fee equal to the cost of travel and the cost of health, accident, and baggage insurance. The organization also receives income from grants and contributions.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable and educational purposes.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the term "charitable" is used in section 501(c)(3) of the Code in its generally accepted legal sense. Such term includes the advancement of education.

Rev. Rul. 65-191, 1965-2 C.B. 157, considers a nonprofit organization organized for the purposes of extending hospitality to foreign visitors and students, promoting cultural and educational programs, and providing an environment for social contact between American citizens and foreign visitors and students, which maintains and operates a hospitality or community center. Rev. Rul. 65-191 holds that the provision of a community center for the mingling of foreign students and visitors with one another and with American citizens is charitable within the meaning of section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 68-165, 1968-1 C.B. 253, holds that a domestic nonprofit corporation that joins with a counterpart group in a country in Latin America to promote student and cultural exchanges and to provide technical and material assistance for self-help projects designed to improve living conditions of underprivileged people in Latin America qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. Specifically, Rev. Rul. 68-165 holds that promoting student and cultural exchanges helps improve the capabilities of the individual and, thus, is educational.

Like the organizations in Rev. Rul. 65-191 and Rev. Rul. 68-165, the organization in this case is facilitating student and cultural exchanges and, thus, is engaging in a charitable activity. Also, by promoting the exchange of children between families in the United States and families in a foreign country, which allows the children to undergo an educational experience through participation in the everyday activities of families in a foreign country, the organization is promoting education. See Rev. Rul. 69-400, 1969-2 C.B. 114.

The organization in this case is distinguishable from the one described in Rev. Rul. 67-327, 1967-2 C.B. 187, wherein an organization whose sole purpose and activity was to arrange group tours for students and faculty members of a university was held to be not exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

HOLDING

An organization that operates an exchange program for children of the United States and a foreign country, under the circumstances described above, is operated exclusively for charitable and educational purposes and thus qualifies for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See sections 1.501(a)-1 and 1.508-1(a) of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1023, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

DEDUCTIBILITY OF CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS

Section 170(a) of the Code provides that there shall be allowed as a deduction, subject to certain limitations, any charitable contribution, as defined in section 170(c), payment of which is made within the taxable year. Section 170(c)(2)(B) defines a charitable contribution to include a contribution or gift to or for the use of a corporation organized and operated exclusively for educational purposes.

Although the term "contribution" is not defined either in the Code or in the Income Tax Regulations, it is well established judicially that in order to be deductible under section 170 of the Code, a contribution must qualify as a gift in the common law sense of being a voluntary transfer of property without consideration. To the extent a transferor receives or can expect to receive, for the money or property he or she transfers, a financial or economic benefit, as distinguished from the incidental benefit that inures to a donor as a member of the general public, then no deduction under section 170 is allowable. Singer v. United States, 449 F. 2d 413 (Ct. Cl. 1971); Rev. Rul. 67-246, 1967-2 C.B. 104; Rev. Rul. 76-185, 1976-1 C.B. 60.

Accordingly, the fees paid by families participating in the exchange program are not deductible as charitable contributions under section 170 of the Code. Further, the expenses incurred by a participating United States family contributing to the support, maintenance and cultural enrichment of the foreign child while the child is a member of the United States family's household for the exchange duration are not deductible as charitable contributions under section 170.

However, contributions from members of the general public, as well as contributions from a family that exceed the fair market value of services received from the family's participation in the exchange program, will be deductible under section 170 of the Code in the manner and to the extent provided therein.

Rev. Rul. 80-287

ISSUE

Does a nonprofit lawyer referral service qualify for exemption from federal income tax under either section 501(c)(3) or section 501(c)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization is a nonprofit corporation created by several bar associations in a metropolitan area to provide a lawyer referral service. The lawyer referral service aids persons who do not have an attorney by helping them to select one. Any member of the public in need of an attorney may visit or call the organization. The individual's problem is screened in order to categorize the area of law involved. From a list of attorneys maintained by the organization, an attorney specializing in the appropriate area of law is selected from within the geographic area preferred by the client. The organization arranges an appointment for the individual with the attorney. This initial appointment is for a minimum of one-half hour and the individual is asked to pay a nominal fee substantially less than the normal fee charged for a half-hour appointment. The attorney subsequently remits this fee to the organization. Any additional services performed by the attorney after the initial appointment are governed by a normal lawyer-client contractual relationship with which the organization has no connection.

Any attorney who is a member of one of the local bar associations may apply to the organization to have his or her name placed on the organization's referral list. Attorneys must apply annually to be listed. Applicants are required to show how long they have been practicing law, whether they are or have been subject to disciplinary procedures, what their areas of legal competence are, and whether they are covered by malpractice insurance. They must agree to leave open a specified number of hours each month for referral clients. If an application is approved by the organization, the attorney pays a fee and is thereupon listed on the organization's attorneys' panel. About 20 percent of the members of the local bar associations appear on the organization's list each year.

In addition to the referral fee, the organization also imposes a nominal service charge of one dollar upon all those who make use of its services. Any operating deficits are defrayed by the local bar associations.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(a) of the Income Tax Regulations states that to be tax exempt, an organization must be both organized and operated exclusively for one or more exempt purposes specified in section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the regulations states that the term "charitable" is used in section 501(c)(3) of the Code in its generally accepted legal sense. It includes relief of the poor and distressed or of the underprivileged, and promotion of social welfare by organizations designed to eliminate prejudice and discrimination or to defend human and civil rights secured by law.

Section 501(c)(6) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of business leagues not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

Section 1.501(c)(6)-1 of the regulations defines a business league as an association of persons having a common business interest, the purpose of which is to promote such common interest and not to engage in a regular business of a kind ordinarily carried on for profit. That regulation also states that a business league's activities should be directed to the improvement of business conditions of one or more lines of business as distinguished from the performance of particular services for individual persons.

Rev. Rul. 71-505, 1971-2 C.B. 232, holds that a city bar association is not exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. The association conducted a number of activities primarily directed at the promotion and protection of the practice of law. These activities were found not to be in furtherance of charitable or educational purposes. That ruling relied in part on the principle, expressed in Better Business Bureau of Washington, D.C., Inc. v. United States, 326 U.S. 279 (1945), Ct. D. 1650, 1945 C.B. 375, that the presence of a single nonexempt purpose, if substantial in nature, will preclude exemption regardless of the number or importance of statutorily exempt purposes. The same result was reached in Rev. Rul. 71-504, 1971-2 C.B. 231, which involved a city medical society carrying on substantial activities directed at promotion of the medical profession.

It is a clearly established principle of the law of charity that a purpose is not charitable unless it is directed to the public benefit. Not every purpose which is beneficial to the community, however, is deemed charitable. As a general rule, providing services of an ordinary commercial nature in a community, even though the undertaking is conducted on a nonprofit basis, is not regarded as conferring a charitable benefit on the community unless the service directly accomplishes one of the established categories of charitable purposes.

In this case, the lawyer referral service does not directly accomplish any of the established categories of charitable purposes. The program is open to all members of the community and, thus, is not operated exclusively for the relief of the poor, distressed, or underprivileged. The organization's activities are directed toward assisting individuals in obtaining preventive or remedial legal services covering the gamut of everyday legal problems and, as such, are not specifically designed to eliminate prejudice or discrimination or to defend human and civil rights secured by law. Therefore, the lawyer referral service does not confer a charitable benefit on the community.

Although the lawyer referral service provides some public benefit, a substantial purpose of the program is promotion of the legal profession. This is a noncharitable purpose, and, in accordance with section 1.501(c)(3)-1(a) of the regulations and the Better Business Bureau case, it precludes exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. Thus, the organization is not exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3).

Operation of the lawyer referral service in the manner described does, however, promote the common business interest of the legal profession within the metropolitan area. The principal purpose of the program is to introduce individuals to the use of the legal profession in the hope that they will enter into lawyer-client relationships on a paying basis as a result of the experience. To achieve this purpose, individuals pay only a nominal fee, substantially below the normal rates for a half-hour appointment. The program encourages people unfamiliar with lawyers to form the habit of seeking professional help, provides middle income persons an opportunity to present their legal problems to a reputable attorney for a modest fixed fee, and combats the notion that only certain persons can afford legal assistance. Thus, the organization's activities are designed to improve conditions within the legal profession as a whole as distinguished from performing particular services for individuals within the meaning of section 1.501(c)(6)-1 of the regulations. Therefore, the organization qualifies for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(6) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 61-170, 1961-2 C.B. 112, and Rev. Rul. 74-308, 1974-2 C.B. 168, which hold that organizations referring persons to nurses and to tow truck operators, respectively, are not exempt under section 501(c)(6) of the Code are distinguishable. Unlike those organizations, which serve primarily to locate customers for their members, this organization provides more than a mere business referral service that is simply a convenience and economy to members of the legal profession. Rather, in the manner described above, this organization serves to improve the image and functioning of the legal profession as a whole.

HOLDING

The separately incorporated nonprofit lawyer referral service qualifies for exemption from federal income tax as a business league described in section 501(c)(6) of the Code. It does not, however, qualify for exemption as a charitable organization described in section 501(c)(3).

APPLICATION PROCEDURES

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1024, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(6) of the Code. See section 1.501(a)-1 of the regulations. In accordance with the instruction to Form 1024, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

Section 861.—Income from Sources within the United States

26 CFR 1.861-8: Computation of taxable income from sources within the United States and from other sources and activities. (Also Sections 904, 907; 1.904-1.)

Foreign tax credit limitation; allocation of expenses to income source. A domestic corporation that operates domestic oil refineries and an unrelated worldwide wholesale business purchases and refines its own crude oil and sells the refined oil products in the U.S. and abroad. For purposes of computing the foreign tax credit limitation, expenses incurred in preparing certain refinery reports required by federal law must be allocated to a class of income that consists of both U.S. and foreign source income from the sale of the refined oil products. If the corporation does not sell refined oil outside the U.S., the expenses would be allocable to a class of income that consists solely of U.S. source income from the sale of the corporation's refined oil products.

Rev. Rul. 80-288

ISSUE

In computing the limitation under section 904(a) of the Internal Revenue Code in the situations described below, are expenses incurred by the taxpayer in preparing reports required by a federal agency allocable to a class of gross income consisting solely of gross income from sources within the United States under section 861(b) of the Code?

FACTS

Situation (1). Taxpayer is a domestic corporation that owns and operates domestic oil refineries and an unrelated worldwide, non-oil wholesale business. Taxpayer purchases and refines its own crude oil and then sells the refined oil products both in the United States and abroad. Taxpayer does not purchase or refine any crude oil within a United States possession.

For the current taxable year taxpayer has United States source gross income of $8,000x from the sale of its refined oil products in the United States, foreign source gross income of $2,000x from the sale of such products abroad, United States source gross income of $2,000x from its wholesale business, and foreign source gross income from the wholesale business of $1,200x.

In the process of refining crude oil, taxpayer's refineries discharge processed waste water and non-contact cooling water. Federal law requires taxpayer to file periodic reports with a government agency on the steps taken by taxpayer to control the amount of pollutants in these discharges. In preparing these reports taxpayer incurs technical expenses (biological, chemical, and engineering), general and administrative expenses, and supervisory expenses, in the amount of $50x. The amount of these expenses is not affected by whether taxpayer has any foreign source gross income. Taxpayer does not incur any legal or accounting expenses in preparing these reports. See section 1.861-8(e)(5) of the Income Tax Regulations for the allocation rules for legal and accounting expenses.

For purposes of computing its foreign tax credit limitation under section 904 of the Code, taxpayer allocates all of the $50x to its gross income from the sale of refined oil products within the United States.

Situation (2). The facts are the same as in Situation (1), except that taxpayer is not engaged in the business of selling refined oil products outside the United States and thus will not have any gross income from foreign sources currently from the sale of such products.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 904(a) of the Code limits the amount of the foreign tax credit to the same proportion of United States income tax against which credit is taken that the taxpayer's taxable income from sources without the United States bears to its entire income for the same taxable year.

Section 907(b) of the Code provides that section 904 shall be applied separately with respect to foreign oil related income (FORI). FORI includes income derived from sales of refined oil products outside the United States or its possessions.

Section 861(b) of the Code states that there shall be deducted from certain specified items of gross income from sources within the United States the expenses properly apportioned or allocated thereto and a ratable part of any expenses which cannot definitely be allocated to some item or class of gross income.

Section 1.861-8(a)(2) of the regulations requires a taxpayer to allocate deductions to a class of gross income.

Section 1.861-8(b)(1) of the regulations states that the gross income to which a specific deduction is definitely related is the "class of gross income." Classes of gross income are not predetermined but must be determined on the basis of the deductions to be allocated.

Section 1.861-8(b)(2) of the regulations states the general rule that a deduction shall be considered definitely related to a class of gross income and therefore allocable to such class if it is incurred as a result of, or incident to, an activity or in connection with property from which such class of gross income is derived.

Section 1.861-8(b)(3) of the regulations permits a taxpayer to allocate deductions that are supportive in nature (such as overhead, general and administrative, and supervisory expenses) under an alternative allocation rule. The alternative rule provides that deductions that are supportive in nature may relate to other deductions that can more readily be allocated to gross income. In such instances, these supportive deductions may be allocated and apportioned along with the deductions to which they relate.

Section 1.861-8(b)(3) of the regulations also provides that supportive deductions may be allocated to a class of gross income under the general rule of section 1.861-8(b)(2), by stating that it would be equally acceptable to attribute supportive deductions on some reasonable basis directly to the activities or property that generate, have generated, or could reasonably have been expected to generate the gross income.

Section 1.861-8(c)(1) of the regulations provides that when a deduction has been allocated to a class of gross income that is included in one statutory grouping and the residual grouping, the deduction must be apportioned between the statutory grouping and the residual grouping. One of the methods described for apportioning expenses is comparing the amount of gross income in the statutory grouping with the amount in the residual grouping. If, however, the class of gross income to which a deduction has been allocated is included in its entirety in either a single statutory grouping or the residual grouping, there is no need to apportion that deduction.

A statutory grouping is gross income from a specific source or activity that must first be determined in order to arrive at taxable income from this specific source or activity under an operative section such as section 904(a) of the Code. Gross income from other activities or sources represent the residual grouping of gross income. See section 1.861-8(a)(4) of the regulations.

Section 1.861-8(f)(1)(iv)(D) of the regulations provides that the rules of section 1.861-8 apply in determining the amount of foreign oil related income.

Under section 904(a) of the Code as applied separately under section 907(b), the statutory grouping is foreign source gross income from the sale of refined oil products and the residual grouping is United States source gross income from the sale of refined oil products. See sections 1.861-8(a)(4) and (f)(1)(i) of the regulations.

Situation (1). The $50*x* of reporting expenses are incurred solely as a result of taxpayer's operation of refineries in the United States and not as a result of taxpayer's wholesale business. Thus, under section 1.861-8(b)(2) of the regulations, these reporting expenses are definitely related and therefore allocable to all of taxpayer's gross income from the sale of taxpayer's refined oil products. It would not be acceptable for taxpayer to allocate these expenses to a class of gross income under the alternative rule of section 1.861-8(b)(3) of the regulations.

Since the class "gross income from the sale of taxpayer's refined oil products" consists of gross income from the sale of such products in both the United States and in foreign countries, taxpayer must apportion the $50*x* of reporting expenses within the class between the statutory grouping, gross income from sources without the United States, and the residual grouping, gross income from sources within the United States, in computing its foreign tax credit limitation under section 904 of the Code as applied separately under section 907(b). An acceptable method for taxpayer to apportion its reporting expenses under the facts in this situation is by comparing the amount of gross income in the statutory grouping ($2,000*x*) with the amount on the residual grouping ($8,000*x*). See section 1.861-8(c)(1)(vi) of the regulations. Under this method $10*x* of reporting expenses will be apportioned to the statutory grouping, foreign source gross income from the sale of refined oil products, and the remaining $40*x* will be apportioned to the residual grouping, gross income from United States sources from the sale of such products, computed as follows:

$$$50x \times \frac{$2{,}000x}{($2{,}000x + $8{,}000x)} = $10x$$

$$$50x \times \frac{$8{,}000x}{($2{,}000x + $8{,}000x)} = $40x$$

Situation (2). The result is the same as in situation (1), except that taxpayer will have no foreign source gross income from the sale of its refined oil products. Thus, under section 1.861-8(c)(1) of the regulations, no apportionment of the $50*x* of reporting expenses is necessary since the entire expense is attributable to the residual grouping, gross income from United States sources from sale of taxpayer's refined oil products.

HOLDING

In computing the limitation under section 904(a) of the Code, expenses incurred by the taxpayer in preparing reports required by a federal agency are in situation (1) allocable under section 861(b) of the Code to a class of gross income that consists of both United States source gross income and foreign source gross income from the sale of taxpayer's refined oil products, and in situation (2) allocable under section 861(b) to a class of gross income that consists solely of United States source gross income from the sale of taxpayer's refined oil products.

Section 2035.—Adjustments for Gifts Made Within 3 Years of Decedent's Death

Transfer within 3 years of death; life insurance; time of transfer. An employee who was insured under a group term life insurance policy, the premiums for which were paid by the employer, assigned all rights under the policy to the insured's spouse in 1971 under an agreement assigning the spouse the rights under any arrangement of the employer for life insurance coverage. The employer terminated its insurance arrangement and obtained a similar arrangement with a different insurer in 1977, less than three years before the insured's death, and the insured assigned the new policy to the spouse. The value of the policy proceeds is not includible in the insured's gross estate. Rev. Rul. 79-231 revoked.

Rev. Rul. 80-289 [1]

The decedent, D was an active employee of the X corporation until the date of death on November 16, 1977.

In 1970, X corporation entered into a group term life insurance arrangement with the Y insurance company. Under the plan, a master insurance policy was issued to the X corporation and individual insurance certificates were issued to the X corporation employees. All premiums were paid by the X corporation. The Y insurance company master policy provides, among other things, that an insured employee may assign all rights in the insurance policy to any person with such an assignment to be effective upon written notification to, and acceptance by, the Y insurance company.

In 1971, D assigned all rights under the insurance policy issued by the Y insurance company to D's spouse. The employer was duly notified of the assignment, and the Y insurance company received and accepted the assignment. Before making the assignment, D executed a written agreement with D's spouse stating that the assignment would vest in the assignee-spouse not only D's rights under the current policy issued by the Y insurance company, but also D's rights under any arrangement for life insurance coverage of the employees of X corporation.

On January 17, 1977, less than 3 years before D's death, the X corporation terminated the insurance arrangement with the Y insurance company and obtained a new master contract from the Z insurance company. Notice of the termination of coverage under the master policy of the Y insurance company was properly given to the employees and their assignees. Upon termination, the new master policy of the Z insurance company came into effect. The terms of the new master policy and the individual employees' certificates of insurance were, in all relevant aspects, identical to the terms of the previous arrangement with the Y insurance company. Two weeks after the Z insurance company coverage came into effect, the decedent executed an assignment of all rights under the new policy to the decedent's spouse.

Rev. Rul. 79-231, 1979-2 C.B. 323, concluded under identical facts that the anticipatory assignment in 1971 was not effective as a present transfer of the decedent's rights in the group term life insurance policy issued by the Z insurance company and that the time of transfer for purposes of section 2035 was in 1977. The Internal Revenue Service maintains the view that the anticipatory assignment was not technically effective as a present transfer of the decedent's rights in the policy issued by Z. Nevertheless, the Service believes that the assignment in 1977 to D's spouse, the object of the anticipatory assignment in 1971, should not cause the value of the proceeds to be includible in the gross estate of the decedent under section 2035 where the assignment was necessitated by the change of the employer's master insurance plan carrier and the new arrangement is identical in all relevant aspects to the previous arrangement with Y.

HOLDING

The value of the proceeds from the group term life insurance policy is not includible in the gross estate of the decedent under section 2035 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-290

ISSUE

Does the fabrication or repair of truck springs, as described below, result in manufacturers excise tax liability?

---

[1] Also released as News Release IR-80-103, dated October 7, 1980.

FACTS

A company performs three types of operations on springs of customer-owned highway trucks:

Operation (1). It assembles a spring from parts in inventory such as main and wrap leaves, bushings, clips, center bolts, and U-bolts to replace a damaged spring.

Operation (2). It restores one or more leaves in a damaged spring by heating them and reshaping the arches to original specification. This operation is not performed if more than 40 percent of the leaves need restoration; instead, a new spring is needed.

Operation (3). It replaces one or more of the leaves in a damaged spring. This operation is not performed if more than 40 percent of the leaves need replacement; instead a new spring is needed.

In Operations (1) and (3) the company will ordinarily use a leaf it has purchased but will, when necessary, manufacture its own leaves.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4061(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code imposes a tax upon parts or accessories (other than tires and inner tubes) for any article enumerated in section 4061(a)(1) when sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer. Among the articles enumerated in section 4061(a)(1) are chassis and bodies for trucks.

Section 4063(c) of the Code excludes rebuilt parts or accessories from the tax.

Section 48.4061(b)-2(a) of the Manufacturers and Retailers Excise Tax Regulations provides that, in general, the term "parts or accessories" includes (1) any article the primary use of which is to improve, repair, replace, or serve as a component part of an automobile truck or bus chassis or body, or taxable tractor, (2) any article designed to be attached to or used in connection with such chassis, body, or tractor, to add to its utility or ornamentation, and (3) any article the primary use of which is in connection with such chassis, body, or tractor, whether or not essential to its operation or use.

Section 48.0-2(a)(4)(i) of the regulations defines a "manufacturer" as including any person who produces a taxable article from scrap, salvage or junk material, or from new or raw material by processing, manipulating, or changing the form of an article or by combining or assembling two or more articles.

Section 146.1-1 of the temporary regulations provides that the rebuilder of a part or accessory shall not be treated as the manufacturer of that part or accessory. However, the section further provides that the rebuilder must pay tax under section 4218(b) of the Code on all new parts or accessories it manufactures and that are used in the rebuilding of the parts or accessories.

The assembly of a replacement spring from various parts is an act of manufacture whether the spring is from scrap, salvage or junk material, or from new or raw material. A new spring has therefore been produced for manufacturers excise tax purposes.

The company's reshaping of up to 40 percent of the leaves of a damaged spring by heating and retempering does not constitute the manufacture of a new spring.

The company's replacement of up to 40 percent of the broken leaves in a damaged spring does not constitute the manufacture of a new spring.

HOLDING

In Operation (1) the assembly by the company of a replacement spring from various parts is the manufacture of a taxable part or accessory within the meaning of section 4061(b)(1) of the Code. The company is liable for the tax imposed by that section on its sale of the spring. The company is entitled to a credit under section 6416(b)(3) for any parts, such as leaves, it purchased tax paid and used in assembling the spring.

In Operation (2) the restoration of the damaged spring leaves by reshaping them does not result in manufacturers excise tax liability.

In Operation (3) the replacement of the broken leaves does not result in manufacturers excise tax liability. However, the company is liable for tax under section 4218 for any leaves it manufactures and uses in this operation.

Section 4063.—Exemptions

26 CFR 146.1-1: Tax-exempt sales of rebuilt automotive parts or accessories.

Whether a company in the business of repairing automotive springs incurs manufacturers excise tax liability in three described operations. See Rev. Rul. 80-290, page 16.

Section 4218.—Use by Manufacturer or Importer Considered Sale

26 CFR 48.4218-1: Tax on use by manufacturer, producer, or importer.

Whether a company in the business of repairing automotive springs incurs manufacturers excise tax liability for leaves it manufactures and uses to replace broken leaves. See Rev. Rul. 80-290, page 16.

Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1]. The regulations provide private foundations with the guidance needed to comply with that Act and affect private foundations that provide long-term care facilities for disabled persons, elderly persons, needy widows, and children.

DATES: The regulations are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1969.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

On March 24, 1980, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Regulations on Foundation and Similar Excise Taxes (26 CFR Part 53) under section 4942 (j)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (45 F.R. 18973). The amendments were proposed to conform existing regulations to section 522 of the Revenue Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 2885) [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 119]. In the same document deletions were proposed to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) and the Regulations on Procedure and Administration (26 CFR Part 301) to reflect the repeal of section 6050 of the Code by section 5 of the Act of December 29, 1979 (Pub. L. No. 96-167; 93 Stat. 1275) [1980-5 I.R.B. 12]. The only comment received from the public on the proposed regulations supported the issuance of the regulations in final form.

The principal author of this regulation is Charles Kerby of the Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to the regulations are hereby adopted under the authority contained in section 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 917, 26 U.S.C. 7805):

Paragraph 1. Section 1.6050-1 is deleted.

§ 53.4942(b)-1 Operating foundations.

(a) Operating foundation defined—(1) In general. For purposes of section 4942 and the regulations thereunder, the term "operating foundation" means any private foundation which makes qualifying distributions (within the meaning of § 53.4942(a)-3(a)(2)) directly for the active conduct of activities constituting its charitable, educational, or other similar exempt purpose equal in value to substantially all of its adjusted net income (as defined in § 53.4942(a)-2(d)) and which, in addition, satisfies the assets test, the endowment test or the support test set forth in § 53.4942(b)-2 (a), (b) and (c).

(2) Certain elderly care facilities described in section 4942(j)(6)—(i) In general. For purposes of the distribution requirements of section 4942 (but no other provision of the Internal Revenue Code) and for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1969, the term "operating foundation" includes a private foundation which—

(A) On or before May 26, 1969, and continuously thereafter to the close of the taxable year, operates and maintains, as its principal functional purpose, residential facilities for the long-term care, comfort, maintenance, or education of permanently and totally disabled persons, elderly persons, needy widows, or children, and

(B) Satisfies the endowment test set forth in § 53.4942(b)-2(b).

(ii) Principal functional purpose. For purposes of section 4942(j)(6) and this subparagraph (2), an organization's "principal functional purpose" is operating and maintaining residential facilities for the long-term care, comfort, maintenance, or education of permanently and totally disabled persons, elderly persons, needy widows, or children, if it is organized for the principal purpose of operating and maintaining such residential facilities and is primarily engaged directly in the operation and maintenance of those facilities. An organization will be treated as being primarily engaged directly in the operation and maintenance of the described residential facilities if at least 50% of the qualifying distributions (as defined in § 53.4942(a)-3(a)(2)) normally made by the organization are expended for the operation and maintenance of the facilities.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to the time for filing estimated income tax by farmers, fishermen, and certain nonresident aliens. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] and the Act of November 10, 1978 [Pub. L. 95-628, 1978-2 C.B. 435]. SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On May 21, 1980, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under section 6073 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. These amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 1012(c) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1614) [supra at 90] and section 7 of the Act of November 10, 1978 (Pub. L. 95-628, 92 Stat. 3630) [supra at 437]. The one written comment received raised an issue unrelated to the proposed regulation changes and no public hearing was requested or held. The proposed amendment is adopted by this Treasury decision without change.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

The amendment made by the Tax Reform Act provides that, in the case of nonresident aliens who are not subject to wage withholding, the due date for filing a declaration of estimated tax for the current taxable year is not earlier than the due date for filing an income tax return for the preceding taxable year. The amendment made by the Act of November 10, 1978, provides an additional exception for farmers and fishermen to the quarterly requirements relating to declarations of estimated tax. The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision reflect these statutory changes.

The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision impose no new reporting burdens or recordkeeping requirements. Evaluation of the effectiveness of these regulations will be based upon comments received from members of Congress, offices within Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service, other governmental services, and the public.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation is Claudine Ausness of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to 26 CFR Part 1 are hereby adopted:

Paragraph 1. Section 1.6073-1 is amended by revising subparagraph (1) of paragraph (b), by redesignating paragraphs (c) and (d) as paragraphs (d) and (e), respectively, and by adding a new paragraph (c). These revised and added provisions read as follows:

§ 1.6073-1 Time and place for filing declarations of estimated [income] tax by individuals.

* * * * *

(b) Farmers or fishermen—(1) In general. In the case of an individual on a calendar year basis—

(i) If at least two-thirds of the individual's total estimated gross income from all sources for the calendar year is from farming or fishing (including oyster farming), or

(ii) If at least two-thirds of the individual's total gross income from all sources shown on the return for the preceding taxable year was from farming or fishing (including oyster farming) (with respect to declarations of estimated tax for taxable years beginning after November 10, 1978), he may file a declaration of estimated tax on or before the 15th day of January of the succeeding calendar year in lieu of the time prescribed in paragraph (a) of this section. For the filing of a return in lieu of a declaration, see paragraph (a) of § 1.6015-1.

* * * * *

(c) Nonresident aliens. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976, in the case of a nonresident alien described in section 6072(c) (relating to returns of nonresident aliens whose wages are not subject to withholding) whose estimated gross income for the calendar year meets the requirements of section 6015(a), a declaration of estimated tax for the calendar year need not be made before June 15th of such calendar year.

* * * * *

Par. 2. Section 1.6073-2 is amended by revising paragraphs (b) and (c) to read as follows:

§ 1.6073-2 Fiscal years.

* * * * *

(b) Farmers or fishermen. In the case of an individual on a fiscal year basis—

(1) If at least two-thirds of the individual's total estimated gross income from all sources for the fiscal year is from farming or fishing (including oyster farming), or

(2) If at least two-thirds of the individual's total gross income from all sources shown on the return for the preceding taxable year was from farming or fishing (including oyster farming) (with respect to declarations of estimated tax for taxable years beginning after November 10, 1978), he may file a declaration on or before the 15th day of the month immediately following the close of his taxable year, in lieu of the time prescribed in paragraph (a) of this section.

(c) Nonresident aliens. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, in the case of a nonresident alien described in section 6072(c) (relating to returns of nonresident aliens whose wages are not subject to withholding) whose anticipated income for the fiscal year meets the requirements of section 6015(a), § 1.6015(a)-1, and § 1.6015(i)-1, the declaration of estimated tax for the fiscal year need not be filed before the 15th day of the 6th month of such fiscal year.

Par. 3. Section 1.6073-3 is amended by revising paragraphs (b) and (c) to read as follows:

§ 1.6073-3 Short taxable years.

* * * * *

(b) Farmers or fishermen. In the case of an individual—

(1) Whose current taxable year is a short taxable year and whose estimated gross income from farming or fishing (including oyster farming) is at least two-thirds of his total estimated gross income from all sources for such current taxable year, or

(2) Whose taxable year preceding the current taxable year was a short taxable year and whose gross income from farming or fishing (including oyster farming) was at least two-thirds of the total gross income from all sources shown on the return for such preceding short taxable year (with respect to declarations of estimated tax for taxable years beginning after November 10, 1978),

he may file a declaration of estimated tax on or before the 15th day of the month immediately following the close of the current taxable year, in lieu of the time prescribed in paragraph (a) of this section.

(c) Nonresident aliens. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, in the case of a short taxable year, a nonresident alien described in section 6072(c) (relating to returns of nonresident aliens whose wages are not subject to withholding) whose anticipated income for the short taxable year meets the requirements of section 6015(a), § 1.6015(a)-1, § 1.6015(g)-1, and § 1.6015(i)-1 on or before the 1st day of the 6th month following the beginning of such year need not file a declaration of estimated tax before the 15th day of the 6th month following the beginning of such year.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in section 6073(d) and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 750, 917; 26 U.S.C. 6073(d) and 7805).

Interest is due on the deficiency from the due date of the return to the end of a 180-day period following the filing of a claim for credit or refund.

Rev. Rul. 80-291

ISSUE

For what period is interest due when a charitable deduction claimed on an estate tax return was disallowed because the deduction did not satisfy the requirements of section 2055 of the Internal Revenue Code at the time the return was filed, but which was later allowed when the gift qualified?

FACTS

The decedent died on April 12, 1977. The estate tax return was timely filed on the due date, January 12, 1978. A charitable deduction was claimed on the return for a bequest that did not satisfy the requirements of section 2055(e) of the Code. Upon examination of the estate tax return the deduction was disallowed by the Internal Revenue Service. On December 19, 1978, the estate petitioned the state court for a reformation of the testamentary trust created by the decedent's will and for relief from certain provisions of the state law so that the remainder devised to charity would qualify for the deduction under section 2055. On February 27, 1979, while the examination of the estate was still pending, the state court entered a judgment granting the relief that the estate requested. On February 28, 1979, the estate filed a claim for credit or refund based on the fact that the testamentary trust had been amended in order to satisfy the requirements of section 2055(e). The examiner secured two waivers, one agreeing to a deficiency based on the disallowed original deduction and the other agreeing to an overassessment based on the subsequently filed claim.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2055(e)(3) of the Code provides that if the amendment of the governing instrument is made after the due date for filing of the estate tax return, the deduction shall be allowed upon the filing of a timely claim for credit or refund (as provided for in section 6511) of an overpayment resulting from the application of this paragraph. In the case of a credit or refund resulting from an amendment made pursuant to section 2055(e), no interest is allowable for the period before the expiration of the 180th day after the date on which the claim for credit or refund is filed.

Section 6601(a) of the Code provides that if any amount of tax imposed by the Code is not paid on or before the last date prescribed for payment, interest shall be paid on such amount for the period from such last date to the date paid.

Section 2.01 of Rev. Proc. 60-17, 1960-2 C.B. 942, provides that interest generally is paid on a tax overpayment for the time the government has the use of the taxpayer's money. Similarly, interest is collected for the time the taxpayer has the use of the government's money. Section 3.02(5)d of Rev. Proc. 60-17 states that the date of overpayment in a restricted interest case is the date from which interest is allowable on the overpayment, and that this same date is the terminating date for charging interest on a deficiency satisfied by credit of an overpayment.

In Manning v. Seeley Tube and Box Co., 338 U.S. 561 (1950), Ct. D. 1729, 1950-1 C.B. 113, the Supreme Court held that a net operating loss carryback that eliminates a deficiency does not abate the interest previously assessed on that deficiency.

Since the estate is not entitled to the use of the money resulting from taking this deduction from the due date of the return to the end of the 180-day period beginning after the date on which the estate filed the claim for refund, interest is due for this period.

HOLDING

Interest is due on the estate tax deficiency from January 12, 1978, the due date of the estate tax return, to August 27, 1979, the end of the 180-day period.

This list does not include organizations, such as private foundations, that are required to file (under an annual information return) on forms other than the Form 990.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

.01 Section 6033(a)(1) of the Code, as amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1969, Pub. L. 91-172, 1969-3 C.B. 10, 27, generally requires the filing of annual information returns by exempt organizations.

.02 Section 6033(a)(2)(A) of the Code provides certain mandatory exceptions to this filing requirement.

.03 In addition, section 6033(a)(2)(B) of the Code provides discretionary exceptions from filing such returns where the Secretary "determines such filing is not necessary to the efficient administration of the internal revenue laws." Section 1.6033-2(g)(6) of the Income Tax Regulations delegates authority to the Commissioner to excuse organizations from the filing requirement. It provides that, "the Commissioner may relieve any organization or class of organizations from filing, in whole or in part, the annual return required by section 6033 where he determines that such returns are not necessary for the efficient administration of the internal revenue laws."

.04 Section 1.6033-2(g)(1) of the regulations provides a partial list of organizations that are not required to file annual returns either because they are excepted by statute or because the Commissioner has exercised the authority referred to above in Sec. 2.03.

.05 In Announcement 77-62, 1977-17 I.R.B. 22, the Commissioner announced that he had exercised his discretionary authority to excuse an additional category of exempt organizations from filing Form 990. This category consisted of exempt organizations described in section 501(c) of the Code (other than private foundations) the gross receipts of which in each taxable year are normally not more than $10,000. These organizations are excused from filing the annual information return for tax years ending on or after December 31, 1976.

.06 From time to time, the Commissioner may excuse additional organizations from filing such returns by publishing an announcement in the Internal Revenue Bulletin, revising the instructions accompanying Form 990, amending the regulations, or other appropriate publication. As these changes to the filing requirements may occur, subsequent revisions to this procedure will be made.

SEC. 3. ORGANIZATIONS CURRENTLY NOT REQUIRED TO FILE ANNUAL RETURNS

.01 The list of organizations described in section 501(c) of the Code that are not required to file annual returns by reason of section 6033(a)(2) is as follows:

1 A church, an interchurch organization of local units of a church, a convention or association of churches, or an integrated auxiliary of a church (such as a men's or women's organization, religious school (such as a seminary), mission society, or youth group).

2 A school (described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) of the Code) below college level affiliated with a church or operated by a religious order, even though it is not an integrated auxiliary of a church.

3 A mission society sponsored by or affiliated with one or more churches or church denominations, more than one-half of the activities of which society are conducted in, or directed at persons in, foreign countries.

4 An exclusively religious activity of any religious order.

5 For tax years ending on or after December 31, 1976, an organization (other than a private foundation) that normally has gross receipts in each taxable year of not more than $10,000. (See Sec. 4.)

6 A state institution, whose income is excluded from gross income under section 115.

7 An organization described in section 501(c)(1).

.02 This list does not include organizations, such as private foundations, that are required to file annual information returns on forms other than Form 990.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS — NORMALLY NOT MORE THAN $10,000

For purposes of Sec. 3 above, the annual gross receipts of an organization are normally not more than $10,000 if:

1 in the case of an organization which has been in existence for one year or less, the organization has received, or donors have pledged to give, gross receipts of $15,000 or less during the first taxable year of the organization;

2 in the case of an organization which has been in existence for more than one, but less than three years, the average of the gross receipts received by the organization in the first two taxable years is $12,000 or less; and,

3 in the case of an organization which has been in existence for three years or more, the average of the gross receipts received by the organization in the immediately preceding three years, including the year for which the return would be filed, is $10,000 or less.

Excise Tax on Fuel Used in Commercial Transportation on Inland Waterways

Announcement 80-136 [1]

A federal excise tax of four cents per gallon will be imposed on the purchaser of any liquid fuel used after September 30, 1980, in vessels for commercial transportation on United States inland or intracoastal waterways. The new excise tax, which is in addition to all other taxes imposed on the sale or use of the fuel, was enacted as part of the Inland Waterways Revenue Act of 1978, Pub. L. 95-502, 1978-2 C.B. 393.

"Commercial waterway transportation" means using a vessel to transport property either for compensation or in the business of the vessel's owner, lessee or operator. Fish or aquatic animal life caught on the voyage, however, are not considered property for this tax.

Liquid fuel for vessels used by a state or local government, passenger vessels and oceangoing vessels with a draft of more than 12 feet is exempt from the excise tax. Liquid fuel for tugs used exclusively to pull oceangoing LASH and SEABEE barges picking up or delivering international cargoes also is exempt from the excise tax.

The four-cents-per-gallon tax is scheduled to increase by two cents per gallon on October 1 of 1981, 1983 and 1985, but will stay at the maximum 10-cents-per-gallon rate after October 1, 1985. The tax is to be reported on Form 720, Quarterly Federal Excise Tax Return. Since each taxpayer is required to include an employer identification number on Form 720, any taxpayer who does not have one should file Form SS-4, Application for Employer Identification Number, with the appropriate Internal Revenue Service Center.

Hardship Areas and Cost-of-Living Differential Tables

Announcement 80-138 [1]

The 1980 cost-of-living differential tables used to calculate certain deductions for U.S. taxpayers living and working outside the United States and a list of hardship areas for January 1, 1980, through August 31, 1980, used to determine whether income earned in a hardship area camp is eligible for exclusion or figure the hardship area deduction have been issued. The final list of 1980 hardship areas will be available at the end of the year and included in the instructions for Form 2555, Deduction from, or Exclusion of, Income Earned Abroad, and in Publication 54, Tax Guide for U.S. Citizens Abroad.

Taxpayers should check the new cost-of-living tables and hardship area list and, if necessary, adjust their withholding or estimated tax payments to avoid a possible estimated tax penalty for 1980. Although the hardship list issued today may be used to estimate 1981 deductions or exclusions, taxpayers are cautioned that this list is not final and adjustments may have to be made later.

Those taxpayers who wish to change the amount of withholding because their estimated deduction for excess foreign living costs has changed should file a statement with their employers showing the anticipated amount of the deduction. A sample of this statement can be found in Publication 54, which is available at U.S. consulates and embassies or from the Office of International Operations, Internal Revenue Service, P.O. Box 384, Benjamin Franklin Station, Washington, D.C. 20044.

Other taxpayers who wish to change the amount of withholding because their estimated exclusion of income earned in a hardship area has changed should notify their employers of the corrected amount of the exclusion as soon as possible.

A hardship area is any place where because of extraordinarily difficult living conditions, notably unhealthful conditions, or excessive physical hardships a U.S. government employee would qualify for a hardship cost differential of 15 percent or more of salary.

Taxpayers can provide the necessary information to establish a hardship area by filling out Form OF 267, Post Differential Questionnaire, which can be obtained by writing the Director, Allowance Staff, Department of State, Washington, D.C. 20520 or by calling (202) 235-9466.

Announcement of the Disbarment, Suspension, or Consent to Voluntary Suspension of Attorneys, Certified Public Accountants, Enrolled Agents and Enrolled Actuaries from Practice before the Internal Revenue Service

Under Section 1026, Title 31 of the United States Code (1970 ed.), the Secretary of the Treasury, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, is authorized to suspend or disbar from practice before the Internal Revenue Service any person who has violated the rules and regulations governing the recognition of attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents or enrolled actuaries to practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

Attorneys, certified public accountants and enrolled agents are prohibited in any Internal Revenue Service matter from directly or indirectly employing, accepting assistance from, being employed by or sharing fees with, any practitioner disbarred or under suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

To enable attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents and enrolled actuaries to identify such disbarred or suspended practitioners, the Director of Practice will announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin the names and addresses of practitioners who have been disbarred or suspended from such practice, their designation as attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary, and the date of disbarment or period of suspension. This announcement will appear and will continue to appear in the weekly Bulletins for five successive weeks for each attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary so suspended or disbarred and will later be consolidated and published in the Cumulative Bulletin.

After due notice and opportunity for hearing, the following individual has been disbarred from further practice before the Internal Revenue Service:

Name	Address	Designation	Effective Date
J. Franklin Moore	Lenoir, NC	Certified Public Accountant	August 18, 1980

Under 31 Code of Federal Regulations, Part 10, an attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary, in order to avoid the institution or conclusion of a proceeding for his disbarment or suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service, may offer his consent to suspension from such practice. The Director of Practice, in his discretion, may suspend an attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary in accordance with the consent offered.

Attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents and enrolled actuaries are prohibited in any Internal Revenue Service matter from directly or indirectly employing, accepting assistance from, being employed by or sharing fees with, any practitioner disbarred or under suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

To enable attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents and enrolled actuaries to identify practitioners under consent suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service, the Director of Practice will announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin the names and addresses of practitioners who have been suspended from such practice, their designation as attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary, and the date or period of suspension. This announcement will appear in the weekly Bulletin at the earliest practicable date after such action and will continue to appear in the weekly Bulletins for five successive weeks or for as many weeks as is practicable for each attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary so suspended and will later be consolidated and published in the Cumulative Bulletin.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Distribution of stock rights from subsidiary to parent's shareholders. A wholly owned subsidiary issued nontransferable subscription rights to purchase stock in the subsidiary to the shareholders of its parent. As the parent expected, an active "when-issued" market developed for the stock of the subsidiary at a market price in excess of the subscription price. The transaction is treated as a nontaxable distribution from the subsidiary to the parent under section 305(a) of the Code that is followed by a distribution of property from the parent to its shareholders. The constructive distribution by the parent is taxable to the shareholders, subject to the provisions of section 301, on the date of distribution, rather than on the date the rights are exercised.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS—Cont'd

The status of an organization exempt under section 501(c)(6) of the Code created to promote interest in, elevate the standards of, and conduct tournaments in, a certain professional sport will not be adversely affected merely because its primary support is derived from the sale of television broadcasting rights to the tournaments it conducts; Rev. Rul. 58-502 clarified.

Rev. Rul. 80-295, page 10.
Unrelated trade or business; broadcasting rights; amateur athletic events. The sale of television and radio broadcasting rights to an independent producer by an exempt organization created as a national governing body for amateur athletics is not unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-296, page 10.
Unrelated trade or business; broadcasting rights; athletic event. The sale of broadcasting rights to a national radio and television network by an organization created by a regional collegiate athletic conference made up of universities to hold an annual athletic event is not unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-297, page 11.
Unrelated trade or business; school leasing tennis facilities. An exempt school that uses its tennis facilities for ten weeks in the summer as a public tennis club operated by employees of the school's athletic department is engaged in unrelated trade or business, and the income earned is not excludable from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property. If the school leases the tennis facilities for a fixed fee to an unrelated individual who operates a tennis club for the public, the school is still engaged in unrelated trade or business, but the lease income is excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property. Unrelated trade or business; university leasing stadium. An exempt university that leases its stadium to a professional football team for several months of the year and provides the utilities, grounds maintenance, and dressing room, linen, and stadium security services is engaged in unrelated trade or business. Further, the university's income from the lease is not excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 301.—Distributions of Property

26 CFR 1.301-1: Rules applicable with respect to distributions of money and other property.
(Also Section 305; 1.305-1.)

Distribution of stock rights from subsidiary to parent's shareholders. A wholly owned subsidiary issued nontransferable subscription rights to purchase stock in the subsidiary to the shareholders of its parent. As the parent expected, an active "when-issued" market developed for the stock of the subsidiary at a market price in excess of the subscription price. The transaction is treated as a nontaxable distribution from the subsidiary to the parent under section 305(a) of the Code that is followed by a distribution of property from the parent to its shareholders. The constructive distribution by the parent is taxable to the shareholders, subject to the provisions of section 301, on the date of distribution, rather than on the date the rights are exercised.

Rev. Rul. 80-292

ISSUE (1). Whether a direct issuance by a subsidiary corporation (S) of nontransferable rights to acquire S stock to the shareholders of its parent corporation (P) should be treated, for federal income tax purposes, as a nontaxable distribution of stock rights by S to P under section 305(a) of the Internal Revenue Code followed by a distribution of property by P to its shareholders under section 301.

ISSUE (2). If the transaction is so viewed, whether the constructive distribution by P to its shareholders is taxable under section 301 of the Code on the date the nontransferable rights to purchase stock are constructively distributed by P, or on the date that the shareholder of P exercises the rights to purchase the subsidiary's stock.

FACTS

P corporation is engaged in manufacturing and P's stock is traded on a national securities exchange. P owns all of the stock of S corporation. S was recently created to engage in a new and relatively speculative business enterprise that was unrelated to P's manufacturing business except that P's manufactured end-product goods will be utilized in S's operations. The management of P and S desired to obtain additional equity capital for S's operations by offering to the shareholders of P an oportunity to obtain 17 percent of the outstanding stock of S with P retaining the remaining 83 percent of S's stock. The plan was declared effective on January 3, 1978, and called for S to directly issue nontransferable subscription rights to subscribe to its stock to the P shareholders on a pro rata basis. One right to purchase one share of S common stock was to be issued for each seven shares of P common stock held by a shareholder at the close of business on the record date of January 20, 1978. Each right was exercisable at a price of 15 dollars. The rights were mailed by S to the P shareholders after close of business on the record date, and were exercisable by the payment of the 15 dollar subscription price by close of business on February 10, 1979.

When the plan for the issuance of the rights became effective on January 3, 1978, as was expected by P, shares of S stock started trading on a "when-issued" basis on the over-the-counter market, and 3 days later, on January 6, 1978, shares of S started trading on a "when-issued" basis at an average price of 35 dollars on a national stock exchange. On this market and exchange, a P shareholder could, and some did, enter into a contract with another person to sell, at the 35 dollar per share market price, to that person shares of S that the P shareholder would receive upon exercise of the right to acquire such stock by payment of the 15 dollar subscription price.

LAW

Section 305(a) of the Code provides the general rule that gross income does not include the amount of any distribution of the stock of a corporation made by such corporation with respect to its stock. Section 305(d)(1) provides that for purposes of section 305(a) the term "stock" includes rights to acquire stock.

Section 301(a) of the Code provides that a distribution of property (as defined in section 317(a)) with respect to a corporation's stock shall be treated as provided in section 301(c). Section 317(a) provides that the term "property" means money, securities, and any other property; except that such term does not include stock in the corporation making the distribution (or rights to acquire such stock). Section 301(c) provides that the portion of the distribution that constitutes a dividend (as defined in section 316) shall be included in gross income; section 301(b) provides that the amount of such a distribution, to a noncorporate distributee, is the fair market value of the property received.

ANALYSIS

ISSUE (1). The subscription rights issued by S appear to represent merely an offer by S to the P shareholders to purchase S stock that was made because those shareholders are likely purchasers of S stock since they own P stock. However, because of the corporate-shareholder relationship of the parties, a question arises as to whether the form of the transaction should determine its characterization for federal income tax purposes. In Baumer v. United States, 580 F.2d 863 (5th Cir. 1978) a corporation granted, without business purpose and for nominal consideration, a valuable option to purchase corporate property to the son of the corporation's sole shareholder. The United States Court of Appeals held that the form of the transaction would not control and that the transaction resulted in a constructive dividend to the father and a gift by the father to the son in the amount of the constructive dividend.

Similarly, in the present transaction the value of the rights to purchase S stock received only by the P shareholders, without any consideration, was significant. The value of the right was evidenced by the fact that the S stock was trading at an average price, during the exercise period, which substantially exceeded the 15 dollar subscription price. If S had distributed rights to purchase its stock to P and P in turn distributed those rights, without consideration, to the P shareholders, the distribution to the P shareholders would be a taxable distribution of property, within the meaning of section 317(a), under section 301. See Rev. Rul. 70-521, 1970-2 C.B. 72. Consequently, considering P's control over S it is appropriate to view the transaction, for federal income tax purposes, as a distribution of stock rights by S to P under section 305(a) of the Code followed by a distribution of property, within the meaning of section 317(a), in the form of stock rights to purchase S stock by P to its shareholders subject to the provisions of section 301, especially since this view is consistent with the economic realities of the transaction.

HOLDING

ISSUE (1). The transaction will be viewed, for federal income tax purposes, as a nontaxable distribution of stock rights, within the meaning of section 305(d)(1) of the Code, by S to P under section 305(a), followed by a distribution of property by P, within the meaning of section 317(a), to its shareholders subject to the provisions of section 301.

ANALYSIS

ISSUE (2). Prior to enactment of the 1954 Code, the Supreme Court of the United States held that a corporation's issuance of rights to purchase stock of another corporation did not constitute a dividend, and instead amounted to an offer that could result in dividend treatment only when the offer was accepted by exercise. Palmer v. Commissioner, 302 U.S. 63 (1937), 1937-2 C.B. 251. Following enactment of the 1954 Code, the Supreme Court indicated that it has not been authoritatively settled whether an issue of rights to acquire stock of another corporation at less than fair market value itself constitutes a dividend, or whether the dividend occurs only on the exercise of the right. Commissioner v. Gordon, 391 U.S. 83 (1968), 1968-2 C.B. 148.

In Rev. Rul. 70-521, the Service concluded that since under the revised 1954 Code treatment of corporate distributions, rights to acquire stock in a corporation other than the distributing corporation are "property" within the meaning of section 317(a) of the Code, a distribution of such rights is taxable as provided under section 301(c) as of the time of distribution. Thus, the Palmer doctrine would not be applied so as to avoid ordinary dividend taxation on the distribution of transferable rights to acquire stock of another corporation on the date of distribution. Redding v. Commissioner, Docket Nos. 79-1775, 79-1776 (7th Cir., Aug. 25, 1980). Similarly, while the rights to acquire S stock in the instant case were nontransferable, as was expected by the management of P, a trading market for these rights developed immediately on the "when-issued" market upon the effective date of the plan. Further, under the facts and circumstances of the instant transaction the "nontransferable" nature of the rights has no effect on the conclusion that the rights to acquire S stock are property.

Since the constructive issuance by P of the stock rights to purchase S stock involves a distribution of property other than cash, the fair market value of the rights distribution in the instant case is determined, pursuant to section 1.301-1(b) of the Income Tax Regulations, as of the date that the rights were actually distributed on January 20, 1978. Section 1.301-1(b) further provides that the date of distribution of property other than cash is determined without regard to whether such date is the same as that on which the distribution is includible in the shareholder's gross income. Thus, January 20, 1978, the date on which P distributed the stock rights, is the date on which the fair market value of these rights is determined even if they are not includible in the gross income of a P shareholder on that date.

HOLDING

ISSUE (2). The constructive distribution by P to its shareholders of nontransferable rights to purchase S stock is a distribution of property on the date of distribution (January 20, 1978), taxable as provided in section 301(c) of the Code. The amount distributed to an individual shareholder of P upon receipt of each right to purchase a share of S stock is the fair market value of each right on the date of distribution. See section 301(b)(1)(A). The amount distributed to a domestic corporate shareholder of P is the lesser of the fair market value of the rights distributed or the adjusted basis of the property in the hands of P. See section 301(b)(1)(B).

Whether a subsidiary corporation's direct issuance to the shareholders of its parent corporation of rights to acquire a portion of the subsidiary corporation's stock should, in part, be treated as a distribution of stock rights from the subsidiary to the parent, which is nontaxable under section 305(a), followed by a distribution of these rights by the parent to its shareholders under section 301. SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On January 30, 1980, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under section 337 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (45 FR 6800). The amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 4 of the Act of November 10, 1978 (92 Stat. 3628). A public hearing was neither requested nor held. After consideration of the one comment received regarding the proposed amendments, those amendments are adopted as revised by this Treasury decision.

Under section 337(e) of the Code, a liquidating corporation that qualifies under section 337(a) may elect to treat the disposition of involuntarily converted property, that occurred within 60 days preceding the date a plan of liquidation is adopted, as a sale or exchange occurring within the 12-month period beginning on that date. If the election is made, no gain or loss from any involuntary conversion during the 60-day period is recognized. H.R. Rep. No. 95-645, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 7 (1978). Under section 337(e)(3), the Secretary is authorized to prescribe regulations specifying the time and manner in which the election is made.

The notice proposed that a corporation could elect the application of section 337(e) by adding a sentence to a statement, presently required under § 1.337-6, expressly electing to apply section 337(e). The notice further proposed that the statement would have to be filed with a timely filed original return of the electing corporation.

After considering the comment received, it was determined that the election should not be made with the statement presently required under § 1.337-6. The Service has ruled that a corporation will not be denied the benefit of section 337(a), for failure to report the information required by § 1.337-6, because section 337(a) is not an elective provision but is mandatory for transactions that meet the statutory requirements (Rev. Rul. 65-30, 1965-1 C.B. 155). On the other hand, section 337(e) is elective. If the corporation fails to make an election under that section, it will not receive the benefit. Furthermore, the return of the liquidating corporation, for the taxable year for which certain information is required under § 1.337-6, may not be the return for the taxable year for which gain (or loss) is reportable for property involuntarily converted during the 60-day period described in section 337(e)(2). Lastly, since section 337(e) was enacted as a relief provision, it seemed harsh to deny a liquidating corporation the benefit of that provision simply because the corporation failed to make the election with the original return.

Accordingly, the final regulations provide that a corporation must file with its return or amended return, for the earliest taxable year for which income (or loss) attributable to involuntarily converted property would otherwise be reportable, a statement that it elects the application of section 337(e) to such property converted during the 60-day period described in section 337(e)(2). The statement must include a general description of all property involuntarily converted during that period.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation is Lawrence M. Axelrod of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of the Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 1 is amended as follows:

Section 1.337-6 is amended by adding a new paragraph (c) at the end to read as follows:

§ 1.337-6 Information to be filed.

* * * * *

(c) Election under section 337(e). (1) Section 337(e) applies to a disposition of converted property (within the meaning of section 1033(a)(2)(E)(ii)) occurring after November 10, 1978, but only if a proper election is made.

(2) To make the election—

(i) A liquidating corporation must file a statement that it elects 337(e) for all of its property involuntarily converted during the 60-day period described in section 337(e)(2).

(ii) The statement must be filed with its return or amended return for the earliest taxable year for which income (or loss) would otherwise be reportable for such conversions.

(iii) The statement must include the name of the liquidating corporation, its taxpayer identification number, a general description of the property, and the date or dates of the conversions. The general description of the property should be sufficient to apprise the Commissioner as to which business and which assets were involuntarily converted. The requirement that a general description of the property be provided is not intended to impose on the taxpayer the burden of listing each item of property destroyed. For example, assume a fire, which destroys a men's clothing store and all the contents therein, precipitates the adoption of a plan of liquidation. A satisfactory statement would set forth the date of the fire, the location of the store, and that furniture, fixtures, inventory, and records of a men's clothing store were destroyed.

(3) If, following the filing of an election under section 337(e), a liquidating corporation fails to satisfy the requirements for a complete liquidation under section 337(a), the corporation must file an amended return reporting any gain or loss that was not recognized by reason of its election under section 337(e).

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 337(e) and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (92 Stat. 3628, 68A Stat. 917; 26 U.S.C. 337(e), 7805).

JEROME KURTZ,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Approved September 16, 1980.

DONALD C. LUBICK,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

(Filed by the Office of the Federal Register on September 30, 1980, 8:45 a.m., and published in the issue of the Federal Register for October 1, 1980, 45 F.R. 64906)

Section 367.—Foreign Corporations

26 CFR 7.367(a)-1: Ruling requests under section 367 relating to certain transfers involving a foreign corporation.

Incorporation of foreign partnership; losses; U.S. partners; section 367 ruling. The amount of ordinary foreign source income that domestic partners are required to include in their income upon the incorporation of their foreign partnership is limited to the amount of losses incurred by the partnership after the domestic partners acquired their partnership interests; Rev. Rul. 78-201 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-293

ISSUE

Upon a foreign partnership's incorporation of its business, is the amount of ordinary foreign source income that United States persons are required to include in their income in accordance with Rev. Rul. 78-201, 1978-1 C.B. 91, limited to the amount of losses incurred by the partnership after United States persons purchased their partnership interests?

FACTS

P, a foreign partnership that was organized 10 years ago, was engaged in the farming business on land in foreign country Z. A, B, C, and X own percentage interests in P of 63, 7, 10, and 20, respectively, the percentage interests being in both capital and profits. A and B are individuals and are United States residents, C is a nonresident alien individual, and X is a domestic corporation. A and B acquired their partnership interests in 1977, in a bona fide purchase, from unrelated parties who were United States residents. X and C acquired their partnership interests when P was originally formed.

P decided to incorporate its farming business in country Z to benefit from certain tax incentives in country Z. Accordingly, in 1978, P transferred all of the assets associated with its farming business to Y, a newly-formed country Z corporation, solely in exchange for all of the stock of Y and Y's assumption of all of the liabilities associated with the farming business. The fair market value of, and P's basis in, its assets transferred to Y exceeded the sum of the liabilities assumed by Y. P remained in existence and retained certain export licenses and the stock of Y.

Prior to 1977, P incurred net losses that were passed through as deductions to the partners and reduced their basis in the partnership and their other income. For the period subsequent to the purchase of the partnership interests by A and B, P had net profits which were included in income by A, B, and X in proportion to their respective interests.

The transfer of assets in exchange for stock would have fulfilled all of the requirements of section 351 of the Code had the transferee been a domestic corporation. The transfer met the requirements of section 3.02(1) of Rev. Proc. 68-23, 1968-1 C.B. 821. Further, within 183 days of the beginning of the transfer P requested a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service that the transaction was not in pursuance of a plan of tax avoidance within the meaning of section 367.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

The applicable Code sections are section 351(a), relating to the nonrecognition of gain or loss on the transfer of property to a corporation controlled by the transferor, and section 367(a)(1), relating to the requirement that a ruling be obtained that an exchange described in section 351 is not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes in order for a foreign corporation to be considered a corporation for purposes of determining gain on the transfer.

The applicable sections of the Temporary Income Tax Regulations are section 7.367(a)-1(b)(3)(i), which provides that a "transfer described in section 367(a)(1)" of the Code is a transfer of property made by a United States person, directly or indirectly, to a foreign corporation in connection with an exchange described in section 351, and section 7.367(a)-1(b)(3)(iii), which provides that a transfer by a foreign partnership in which a United States person holds an interest shall be considered to have been made by any such United States person who realizes gain or other income (whether or not recognized) on account of the transfer.

Pursuant to section 7.367(a)-1(b)(3)(iii) of the Temporary Regulations, A, B, and X are considered to have made the transfer of property to Y that P made. Since the transfer is described in section 351 of the Code and the transfer of property was made indirectly by a United States person (A, B, and X) to a foreign corporation (Y), the transfer is described in section 367(a)(1). Unless it is established that the transfer to Y was not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes, then, pursuant to section 367(a)(1), Y will not be considered to be a corporation for purposes of determining gain recognized on the transfer. The transfer of property to Y qualifies for nonrecognition of gain to P under section 351 (thus no gain is passed through to the partners) if Y is considered to be a corporation.

Rev. Rul. 78-201 required the United States transferor to include in income an amount of ordinary foreign source income (the sum of branch losses previously incurred) as a condition for obtaining a ruling that the exchange was not in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes within the meaning of section 367(a)(1) of the Code. In the instant situation, the acquisition by A and B in 1977, through a taxable sale, of their 70 percent interest in P's capital and profits created a new partnership for federal income tax purposes. See section 708(b)(1)(B) of the Code. Since P had only net profits during the period subsequent to the purchase of their partnership interests by A and B, those partners did not have any partnership losses from P prior to the incorporation.

X acquired its partnership interest in P 10 years ago. The losses incurred by the foreign farming business of P prior to 1977, and prior to its incorporation, were taken into account by X in proportion to its partnership interest and reduced the amount of X's worldwide income subject to federal income tax. As a result of the incorporation of the foreign farming business of P, the income to be produced by these operations will not be taken into account by X, and thus will not increase the amount of X's worldwide income subject to federal income tax. Accordingly, the transfer by P of all of the assets associated with its farming business to Y will be deemed not to be in pursuance of a plan having as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income taxes within the meaning of section 367(a)(1) of the Code only if X (who is considered to be a transferor by application of section 7.367(a)-1(b)(3)(iii) of the Temporary Regulations), pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201, recognizes as gain on the transfer an amount of ordinary foreign source income equal to its proportionate share of the sum of the foreign country Z losses previously incurred by P.

HOLDING

Since P incurred only net profits after A and B became partners in a taxable sale or exchange, and thus A and B were unable to utilize P's net losses, Rev. Rul. 78-201 does not require A and B to include the sum of P's prior losses in their income as ordinary foreign source income. However, since X utilized P's net losses, Rev. Rul. 78-201 requires X to recognize as gain on the transfer an amount of ordinary foreign source income equal to X's proportionate share of the sum of the foreign country Z losses previously incurred by P as a condition for obtaining a ruling under section 367(a)(1) of the Code. In addition, X's basis in P, P's basis in the Y stock, and Y's basis in the assets received are increased by the amount of gain that X recognizes, pursuant to Rev. Rul. 78-201, on the transfer.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 78-201 is amplified.

Section 501.—Exemption From Tax on Corporations, Certain Trusts, Etc.

26 CFR 1.501(c)(6)-1: Business leagues, chambers of commerce, real estate boards, and boards of trade.

Broadcasting rights; professional tournaments. The status of an organization exempt under section 501(c)(6) of the Code created to promote interest in, elevate the standards of, and conduct tournaments in, a certain professional sport will not be adversely affected merely because its primary support is derived from the sale of television broadcasting rights to the tournaments it conducts; Rev. Rul. 58-502 clarified.

Rev. Rul. 80-294

ISSUE

Is the exempt status of an organization described in section 501(c)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code adversely affected when its primary source of support is income derived from the sale of broadcasting rights?

FACTS

The organization was formed to promote interest in a particular sport, to elevate the standards of the sport as a profession, and to sponsor and conduct tournaments for the encouragement of its members. The organization's membership is open to all professional players of the sport in the United States. The organization has been recognized as exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(6) of the Code.

Among its activities, the organization conducts apprentice programs, annual conventions and merchandise shows, and tournaments. Its support is derived primarily from the sale of television broadcasting rights to its tournaments. Other support is from membership dues, penalties, and apprentice fees. Its expenses are for salaries, administrative costs of its programs, and tournament costs, including prizes and awards.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1.501(c)(6)-1 of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a business league is an association of persons having some common business interest, the purpose of which is to promote such common interest and not to engage in a regular business of a kind ordinarily carried on for profit. It also provides that the activities of the organization should be directed to the improvement of business conditions of one or more lines of business as distinguished from the performance of particular services for individual persons.

Rev. Rul. 58-502, 1958-2 C.B. 271, describes an association, exempt under section 501(c)(6) of the Code, which was formed to promote and conserve the best interest and true spirit of a game and which accomplishes its exempt purposes by the sponsoring and conducting of championship tournaments and the incidental sale of radio and television broadcasting rights. Rev. Rul. 58-502 implies that unless the amount of income received by the association from the sale of broadcasting rights is relatively insignificant, the sale of broadcasting rights would not serve the association's exempt purposes.

Here, the organization's tournament activities are similar to those of an organization described in Rev. Rul. 58-502, with the exception that the organization's primary source of support is the sale of broadcasting rights.

The sponsorship of tournaments and the sale of broadcasting rights with respect thereto by the organization directly promotes the interests of those engaged in the sport by encouraging participation in the sport and by enhancing awareness by the general public of the sport as a profession. The amount of income derived from the sale of broadcasting rights is not, by itself, determinative of whether the activity furthers the purposes specified in section 501(c)(6) of the Code. Thus, under the circumstances described above, sponsoring tournaments and selling broadcasting rights are activities directly related to exempt purposes, notwithstanding the amount of income received.

HOLDING

An organization exempt from federal income taxes under section 501(c)(6) of the Code will not adversely affect its exempt status if its primary source of support is derived from the sale of broadcasting rights to the sports tournaments it conducts.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 58-502 is clarified to remove the implication that the sale of television broadcasting rights to an organization's tournaments furthers exempt purposes within the meaning of section 501(c)(6) of the Code only when the amount of income derived therefrom is insignificant in amount.

Section 513.—Unrelated Trade or Business

26 CFR 1.513-1: Definition of unrelated trade or business.

Unrelated trade or business; broadcasting rights; amateur athletic events. The sale of television and radio broadcasting rights to an independent producer by an exempt organization created as a national governing body for amateur athletics is not unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-295

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, is the sale of exclusive broadcasting rights to athletic events by an organization exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code unrelated trade or business within the meaning of section 513?

FACTS

The organization was created as a national governing body for amateur athletics to promote systematic physical exercise and education, to foster interest in amateur sports among the public at large, and to encourage widespread public participation in athletics and recreational sports.

The organization sponsors, supervises, and regulates programs in a number of different amateur sports. It also arranges for and coordinates open competition for amateur athletes at the local, state, regional, and national levels.

The organization receives income each year from the sale of exclusive television and radio broadcasting rights to an independent producer, who contracts with a commercial network to broadcast many of the athletic events sponsored, supervised, and regulated by the organization.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 513(a) of the Code defines the term "unrelated trade or business" as any trade or business the conduct of which is not substantially related (aside from the need of an organization for income or funds or the use it makes of the profits derived) to the exercise or performance by an organization of its exempt function.

Section 1.513-1(d)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a trade or business is "substantially related" only if the production or distribution of the goods or the performance of the service from which the gross income is derived contributes importantly to the accomplishment of the purposes for which exemption is granted.

The broadcasting of the organization's sponsored, supervised, and regulated athletic events promotes the various amateur sports, fosters widespread public interest in the benefits of its nationwide amateur athletic program, and encourages public participation. Therefore, the organization's sale of broadcasting rights and the resultant broadcasting of its athletic events contributes importantly to the accomplishment of its exempt purposes.

HOLDING

The sale of exclusive broadcasting rights, under the circumstances described above, is substantially related to the purpose constituting the basis for the organization's exemption and, therefore, is not unrelated trade or business within the meaning of section 513 of the Code.

26 CFR 1.513-1: Definition of unrelated trade or business.

Unrelated trade or business; broadcasting rights; athletic event. The sale of broadcasting rights to a national radio and television network by an organization created by a regional collegiate athletic conference made up of universities to hold an annual athletic event is not unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-296

ISSUE

Is the sale of broadcasting rights to an annual intercollegiate athletic event by an organization exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code unrelated trade or business within the meaning of section 513?

FACTS

The organization was created by a regional collegiate athletic conference, made up of universities exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, for the purpose of conducting an annual competitive athletic game between the champion of the conference and another collegiate team. The annual game generates income from various sources including admission charges and the sale of exclusive broadcasting rights to a national radio and television network.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 513(a) of the Code defines the term "unrelated trade or business" as any trade or business the conduct of which is not substantially related (aside from the need of an organization for income or funds or the use it makes of the profits derived) to the exercise or performance by an organization of its exempt function.

Section 1.513-1(d)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a trade or business is "substantially related" only if the production or distribution of the goods or the performance of the service from which the gross income is derived contributes importantly to the accomplishment of the purposes for which exemption is granted. Whether activities productive of gross income contribute importantly to the accomplishment of any purpose for which an organization is granted exemption depends in each case upon the facts and circumstances involved.

College and university athletic organizations that promote certain aspects of athletic competition have generally been held to be educational and thus exempt from federal income tax. An athletic program is considered to be an integral part of the educational process of a university, and activities providing necessary services to student athletes and coaches further the educational purposes of the university. See Rev. Rul. 67-291, 1967-2 C.B. 184. See also Rev. Rul. 64-275, 1964-2 C.B. 142.

The Service has traditionally taken the position that income from paid admissions to college and university athletic events, regardless of the number of persons in attendance or the amount of paid admissions, is not taxable as income from unrelated trade or business because the events themselves are related to the educational purposes of the colleges and universities. This position is consistent with the following language contained in the Committee Reports on the Revenue Act of 1950, in which the predecessor to section 513 of the Code was enacted.

Athletic activities of schools are substantially related to their educational functions. For example, a university would not be taxable on income derived from a basketball tournament sponsored by it, even where the teams were composed of students from other schools. (H.R. Rep. No. 2319, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 37, 109 (1950), 1950-2 C.B. 380, 458.)

Of course, income of an educational organization from charges for admissions to football games would not be deemed to be income from an unrelated business, since its athletic activities are substantially related to its athletic program. (S. Rep. No. 2375, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. 29, 107 (1950), 1950-2 C.B. 483, 505.)

On the basis of the facts and circumstances presented in this case the educational purposes served by intercollegiate athletic activities are identical whether conducted directly by individual universities or by their regional athletic conference. Also, the educational purposes served by exhibiting a game before an audience that is physically present and exhibiting the game on television or radio before a much larger audience are substantially similar. Therefore, the sale of the broadcasting rights and the resultant broadcasting of the game contributes importantly to the accomplishment of the organization's exempt purposes.

HOLDING

The sale of broadcasting rights, under the circumstances described, is substantially related to the purpose constituting the basis for the organization's exemption and is not unrelated trade or business within the meaning of section 513 of the Code.

(Also Section 512; 1.512(b)-1.)

Unrelated trade or business; school leasing tennis facilities. An exempt school that uses its tennis facilities for ten weeks in the summer as a public tennis club operated by employees of the school's athletic department is engaged in unrelated trade or business, and the income earned is not excludable from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property. If the school leases the tennis facilities for a fixed fee to an unrelated individual who operates a tennis club for the public, the school is still engaged in unrelated trade or business, but the lease income is excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property. Rev. Rul. 76-402 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-297

ISSUE

In the two situations described below, is a school's furnishing of its tennis facilities unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Internal Revenue Code and, if so, is income from these activities excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property under section 512(b)(3)?

FACTS

SITUATION 1.—TENNIS CLUB RUN BY A SCHOOL'S EMPLOYEES

A school is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code and is classified as an educational organization described in section

170(b)(1)(A)(ii). The school's purposes are limited to those involving the advancement of education. The school's facilities include tennis courts and dressing rooms, which are employed during the regular academic year in the school's educational programs. For ten weeks during the summer the school operates a tennis club. For a fee, the general public is invited to join the club and thereby use the school's tennis courts and dressing rooms during designated periods. Two employees of the school's athletic department conduct the affairs of the club, including collecting membership fees and scheduling court time. The net income of the club is used for the exempt purposes of the school.

SITUATION 2.—TENNIS CLUB RUN BY A PROFESSIONAL USING SCHOOL FACILITIES

This Situation is the same as Situation 1, except that the school merely makes the facilities available to an unrelated individual for ten weeks at a fixed fee which does not depend, in whole or in part, on the income or profits derived from the leased property. The individual forms a tennis club and hires employees to administer the affairs of the club. Under a contract with the school, the individual must repair any damage to the facilities beyond normal wear and tear at the end of the ten weeks.

LAW

Section 511 of the Code imposes a tax on the unrelated business taxable income of organizations exempt under section 501(c)(3).

Section 512(a) of the Code defines "unrelated business taxable income" as the gross income derived by an organization from any unrelated trade or business regularly carried on by it, less certain deductions, but with modifications provided in section 512(b). For purposes of determining unrelated business taxable income, section 512(b)(3) excludes rents from real property.

Section 513(a) of the Code defines "unrelated trade or business" of an exempt organization as any trade or business the conduct of which is not substantially related (aside from the need of such organization for income or funds or the use it makes of the profits derived) to the exercise or performance by such organization of its charitable, educational or other purpose or function constituting the basis for its exemption under section 501.

Section 513(c) of the Code provides that the term "trade or business" includes any activity which is carried on for the production of income from the sale of goods or the performance of services.

Section 1.512(b)-1(c)(5) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that rents from real property, for purposes of the exclusion from unrelated business taxable income, do not include payments for the use or occupancy of rooms or other space where services are also rendered to the occupant, such as for the use or occupancy of rooms in hotels, boarding houses, or apartment houses furnishing hotel services, or for the use or occupancy of space in parking lots or warehouses. Generally, services are considered rendered to the occupant if they are for his or her convenience and are not those usually or customarily rendered in connection with the rental of rooms or other space for occupancy only. The regulation further provides that supplying maid service constitutes such service, whereas the furnishing of heat and light, the cleaning of public entrances, exits, stairways, and lobbies, and the collection of trash, are not considered services rendered to the occupant.

Section 1.513-1(d)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a trade or business is "related" to exempt purposes, in the relevant sense, only when the conduct of the business activities has causal relationship to the achievement of exempt purposes (other than through the production of income); and it is "substantially related," for purposes of section 513 of the Code only if the causal relationship is a substantial one. Section 1.513-1(d)(2) further provides that for the conduct of trade or business from which a particular amount of gross income is derived to be substantially related to purposes for which exemption is granted, the production or distribution of the goods or the performance of the services from which the gross income is derived must contribute importantly to the accomplishment of those purposes.

Rev. Rul. 76-402, 1976-2 C.B. 177, considered an exempt school that provides tennis courts, furnished dormitory rooms, linens, maid service, meals, and dining facilities to an individual for use by the individual in conducting a summer tennis camp. Rev. Rul. 76-402 assumed that the income was taxable as income from an unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Code and was not excludable from unrelated business taxable income under section 512(b)(3) and section 1.512(b)-1(c)(5) of the regulations as rent from real property.

ANALYSIS AND HOLDINGS

In this case, by furnishing tennis facilities in the above described situations, the school is performing services for the production of income, which constitutes a trade or business under section 513 of the Code. Since the school furnishes its tennis facilities during ten weeks of the year, it is engaging in a trade or business regularly carried on within the meaning of section 512. The exempt purposes of the school are limited to those involving the advancement of education. Furnishing tennis facilities in the manner described is not an activity that furthers the educational purposes of a school. Thus, this activity does not have a substantial causal relationship to the achievement of the school's exempt purposes, as required by section 1.513-1(d)(2) of the regulations. Accordingly, the school's furnishing of its tennis facilities in the above described situations is unrelated trade or business under section 513.

In Situation 1, as in Rev. Rul. 76-402, the school furnishes more than just its facilities. It operates the tennis club through its own employees, who perform substantial services for the participants in the tennis club. Accordingly, income from the school's furnishing of its tennis facilities through the operation of a tennis club in the manner described is not excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property under section 512(b)(3) of the Code and section 1.512(b)-1(c)(5) of the regulations.

In Situation 2, the school furnishes its tennis facilities to an unrelated individual without services and for a fixed fee which does not depend in whole or in part on the income or profits derived from the leased property. Unlike Situation 1, where the school itself provided services, the unrelated club operator hires employees to administer the affairs of the club. Accordingly, income from the school's furnishing of its tennis facilities through an individual operator is excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property under section 512(b)(3) of the Code and section 1.512(b)-1(c)(5) of the regulations.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 76-402 is amplified.

Unrelated trade or business; university leasing stadium. An exempt university that leases its stadium to a professional football team for several months of the year and provides the utilities, grounds maintenance, and dressing room, linen, and stadium security services is engaged in unrelated trade or business. Further, the university's income from the lease is not excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property.

Rev. Rul. 80-298

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, is a university's leasing of its stadium to a professional football team unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Internal Revenue Code and, if so, is income from this activity excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property under section 512(b)(3)?

FACTS

The university is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, and has been classified as an educational organization described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii). The university's facilities include a stadium, which it uses in its physical education program and intramural and intercollegiate sports program. In addition to the stadium's use in connection with the university's educational activities, for a fixed fee, the university permits a professional football team to use the stadium for practice during several months of the year. Under a lease agreement, in addition to heat, light, and water, the university is responsible for maintaining the playing surface and all other grounds maintenance. It also provides dressing room, linen, and stadium security services for the professional team. Security services include crowd and traffic control, guarding the stadium and maintaining the privacy of practice sessions.

LAW

Section 511 of the Code imposes a tax on the unrelated business taxable income of organizations exempt under section 501(c)(3).

Section 512(a) of the Code defines "unrelated business taxable income" as the gross income derived by an organization from any unrelated trade or business regularly carried on by it, less certain deductions, but with modifications provided in section 512(b). For purposes of determining unrelated business taxable income, section 512(b)(3) excludes rents from real property.

Section 513(a) of the Code defines "unrelated trade or business" of an exempt organization as any trade or business the conduct of which is not substantially related (aside from the need of such organization for income or funds or the use it makes of the profits derived) to the exercise or performance by such organization of its charitable, educational or other purpose or function constituting the basis for its exemption under section 501.

Section 513(c) of the Code provides that the term "trade or business" includes any activity which is carried on for the production of income from the sale of goods or the performance of services.

Section 1.512(b)-1(c)(5) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that rents from real property, for purposes of the exclusion from unrelated business taxable income, do not include payments for the use or occupancy of rooms or other space where services are also rendered to the occupant, such as for the use or occupancy of rooms in hotels, boarding houses, or apartment houses furnishing hotel services, or for the use or occupancy of space in parking lots or warehouses. Generally, services are considered rendered to the occupant if they are for his or her convenience and are not those usually or customarily rendered in connection with the rental of rooms or other space for occupancy only. The regulation further provides that supplying maid service constitutes such service, whereas the furnishing of heat and light, the cleaning of public entrances, exits, stairways, and lobbies, and the collection of trash, are not considered services rendered to the occupant.

Section 1.513-1(d)(2) of the regulations provides that a trade or business is "related" to exempt purposes, in the relevant sense, only when the conduct of the business activities has causal relationship to the achievement of exempt purposes (other than through the production of income); and it is "substantially related," for purposes of section 513 of the Code only if the causal relationship is a substantial one. Section 1.513-1(d)(2) further provides that for the conduct of trade or business from which a particular amount of gross income is derived to be substantially related to purposes for which exemption is granted, the production or distribution of the goods or the performance of the services from which the gross income is derived must contribute importantly to the accomplishment of those purposes.

Rev. Rul. 76-402, 1976-2 C.B. 177, considered an exempt school that provides tennis courts, furnished dormitory rooms, linens, maid service, meals, and dining facilities to an individual for use by the individual in conducting a summer tennis camp. Rev. Rul. 76-402 assumed that the income was taxable as income from an unrelated trade or business under section 513 of the Code and was not excludable from unrelated business taxable income under section 512(b)(3) and section 1.512 (b)-1(c)(5) of the regulations as rent from real property.

ANALYSIS AND HOLDINGS

In this case, by leasing its stadium in the manner described, the university is performing services for the production of income, which constitutes a trade or business under section 513(c) of the Code. Since the university leases its stadium during several months of the year, it is engaging in a trade or business regularly carried on within the meaning of section 512. The exempt purposes of the university are limited to those involving the advancement of education. Leasing a stadium to a professional football team in the manner described is not an activity that furthers the educational purposes of a university. Thus, this activity does not have a substantial causal relationship to the achievement of the university's exempt purposes, as required by section 1.513-1(d)(2) of the regulations. Accordingly, the university's leasing of its stadium is unrelated trade or business under section 513.

Additionally, providing extensive grounds and playing field maintenance, dressing room linens, and stadium and dressing rooms, pursuant to the lease, the university, like the school in Rev. Rul. 76-402, is furnishing substantial services for the convenience of the lessee that go beyond those usually rendered in connection with the rental of space for occupancy only. Accordingly, income from the university's leasing of its stadium to a professional football team is not excluded from unrelated business taxable income as rent from real property under section 512 (b)(3) of the Code and section 1.512 (b)-1(c)(5) of the regulations.

See Rev. Rul. 76-402, for another example of the computation of unrelated business taxable income where amounts are from dual use of facilities and personnel.

The President of the United States of America: The Honorable George S. However, if the meaning of such a term under the laws of one of the Contracting States is different from the meaning of the term under the laws of the other Contracting State, the Contracting State may, in order to prevent double taxation or to further any other purposes of this Convention, establish a common meaning of the term for purposes of this Convention.

ARTICLE 4.—FISCAL DOMICILE

(1) For the purpose of this Convention, the question whether an individual was domiciled in one of the Contracting States shall be determined according to the law of that State.

(3)(a) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (2), an individual who at the time of his death or the making of a gift was a citizen of one of the Contracting States without being a citizen of the other Contracting State, and who would be considered under paragraph (1) as having been domiciled in both Contracting States, shall be deemed to have been domiciled only in the Contracting State of which he was a citizen, if he had a clear intention to retain his domicile in that Contracting State and if he was domiciled in the other Contracting State in the aggregate less than 5 years during the 7-year period ending with the year of his death or the making of a gift.

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (2) or of subparagraph (a) of this paragraph, an individual who at the time of his death or the making of a gift was a citizen of one of the Contracting States without being a citizen of the other Contracting State, and who would be considered under paragraph (1) as having been domiciled in both Contracting States, shall be deemed to have been domiciled only in the Contracting State of which he was a citizen if:

(i) He was domiciled in the other Contracting State in the aggregate less than 5 years during the 7-year period ending with the year of his death or the making of a gift, provided that he was in that other Contracting State by reason of an assignment of employment or as the spouse or other dependent (personne à charge) of a person present in that other Contracting State for such a purpose; or

(ii) He was domiciled in the other Contracting State in the aggregate less than 7 years during the 10-year period ending with the year of his death or the making of a gift, provided that he was in that other Contracting State by reason of a renewal of an assignment of employment or as the spouse or other dependent (personne à charge) of a person present in that other Contracting State for such a purpose.

Chapter III.—Taxing Rules

ARTICLE 5.—IMMOVABLE (REAL) PROPERTY

(1) Immovable (real) property may be taxed by a Contracting State if such property is situated in that State.

(2) The term "immovable (real) property" shall be defined in accordance with the tax laws of the Contracting State in which such property is situated. Mortgages or other claims secured by immovable (real) property shall not be regarded as immovable (real) property.

(3) The provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) shall also apply to immovable (real) property which forms part of the business property of a permanent establishment or is used for the performance of professional services or other independent activities of a similar character.

ARTICLE 6.—BUSINESS PROPERTY OF A PERMANENT ESTABLISHMENT AND ASSETS PERTAINING TO A FIXED BASE USED FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

(1) Except as provided in Article 5, assets (other than ships and aircraft operated in international traffic and movable property pertaining to the operation of such ships and aircraft) used in or held for use in the conduct of the business of a permanent establishment may be taxed by a Contracting State if the permanent establishment is situated therein.

(2) For purposes of this Convention, the term "permanent establishment" means a fixed place of business through which the business of an enterprise is wholly or partly carried on. If an individual is a member of a partnership or other association that is not a corporation which is engaged in industrial or commercial activity through a fixed place of business, he shall be deemed to have been so engaged to the extent of his interest therein.

(3) The term "permanent establishment" shall include especially:

(a) A seat of management;

(b) A branch;

(c) An office;

(d) A factory;

(e) A workshop;

(f) A warehouse;

(g) A mine, quarry, or other place of extraction of natural resources; and

(h) A building site or a construction or assembly project which exists for more than 12 months.

(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (2) and (3), the term "permanent establishment" shall not be deemed to include:

(a) The use of facilities solely for the purpose of storage, display, or delivery of goods or merchandise belonging to the enterprise;

(b) The maintenance of a stock of goods or merchandise belonging to the enterprise solely for the purpose of storage, display, or delivery;

(c) The maintenance of a stock of goods or merchandise belonging to the enterprise solely for the purpose of processing by another person;

(d) The maintenance of a fixed place of business solely for the purpose of purchasing goods or merchandise, or the collection of information, for the enterprise;

(e) The maintenance of a fixed place of business solely for the purpose of advertising, supplying information, conducting scientific research, or similar activities which have a preparatory or auxiliary character, for the enterprise; or

(f) The maintenance of a fixed place of business solely for investment purposes (and not for purposes of engaging in industrial or commercial activity) of an individual, whether by the individual or his employees or through a broker or other agent.

(5) A person who was acting in a Contracting State on behalf of an enterprise—other than agent to whom paragraph (4)(f) or (6) applies—shall be deemed to have been a permanent establishment of the enterprise in that State if such person had, and habitually exercised in that State, an authority to conclude contracts in the name of the enterprise, unless the exercise of such authority was limited to the purchase of goods or merchandise for the enterprise.

(6) An enterprise shall not be deemed to have had a permanent establishment in a Contracting State merely because the enterprise engaged in industrial or commercial activity in that State through a broker, general commission agent, or any other agent of an independent status acting in the ordinary course of his business.

(7) The fact that an enterprise controlled a corporation which engaged in industrial or commercial activity in a Contracting State (whether through a permanent establishment or otherwise) shall not be taken into account in determining whether the enterprise had a permanent establishment in that State.

(8) Except as provided in Article 5, assets pertaining to a fixed base used for the performance of professional services or other independent activities of a similar character may be taxed by a Contracting State if the fixed base is situated in that State.

ARTICLE 7.—TANGIBLE MOVABLE PROPERTY

(1) Tangible movable property other than currency may be taxed by a Contracting State if such property is situated in that State and is not taxable by the other Contracting State pursuant to Article 6. For this purpose, tangible movable property which is in transit shall be considered situated at the place of destination.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), tangible movable property owned by an individual referred to in paragraph (3) of Article 4 and used for his normal personal use or that of his family may be taxed only by the Contracting State in which the individual was domiciled.

(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), ships and aircraft operated in international traffic, and movable property pertaining to the operation of such ships and aircraft, may be taxed by a Contracting State if such ships and aircraft are registered in that Contracting State. Other ships and aircraft may be taxed by a Contracting State if the harbors and airports most frequently used by such ships and aircraft are situated in that State.

ARTICLE 8.—TAXATION OTHER THAN PURSUANT TO ARTICLES 5, 6, AND 7

Except as provided in Articles 5, 6, and 7, property, including shares or stock in a corporation, debt obligations (whether or not there is written evidence thereof), other intangible property, and currency may be taxed by a Contracting State only if the decedent or donor was a citizen of or was domiciled in that State at the time of death or the making of a gift, and if taxable by that State under its laws.

ARTICLE 9.—DEDUCTIONS OF DEBTS

(1) Debts, to the extent they would be deductible according to the internal law of a Contracting State, shall be deducted from the gross value of the property which may be taxed by that State in the proportion that such gross value bears to the gross value of the entire property wherever situated.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), for purposes of determining the French tax:

(a) Debts pertaining to a permanent establishment or to a fixed base used for the performance of professional services or other independent activities of a similar character shall be deducted from the value of assets referred to in Article 6.

(b) Debts pertaining to ships and aircraft operated in international traffic and to movable property related to the operation of such ships and aircraft shall be deducted from the value of these assets.

ARTICLE 10.—CHARITABLE EXEMPTIONS AND DEDUCTIONS

(1) A transfer to a legal entity created or organized in a Contracting State shall be exempt from tax, or fully deductible from the gross value liable to tax, in the other Contracting State with respect to its taxes referred to in Article 2, provided the transfer would be eligible for such exemption or deduction if the legal entity had been created or organized in that other Contracting State.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall apply only if the legal entity:

(a) Has a tax-exempt status in the first Contracting State by reason of which transfers to such legal entity are exempt or fully deductible;

(b) Is organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes; and

(c) Receives a substantial part of its support from contributions from the public or governmental funds.

(3) This Article shall not apply to transfers to a Contracting State or a political or administrative subdivision thereof unless specifically limited to a purpose described in paragraph (2) (b).

ARTICLE 11.—COMMUNITY PROPERTY AND MARITAL DEDUCTION

(1) Property (other than community property) which was acquired during marriage for consideration by an individual who at the time of death or the making of a gift was domiciled in, or a citizen of, the United States and which passes to the spouse of such individual shall, for the purposes of determining the French tax, be treated as if it were community property, unless the spouses expressly elected to have a treatment other than community property treatment provided by French civil law.

(2) In the case of an individual who was domiciled in France there shall, for purpose of determining the United States tax, be allowed the same marital deduction in effect on the date of signature of this Convention, as if such individual were domiciled in the United States, and in such a case the tax rates applicable if the decedent or donor had been domiciled in the United States shall apply. If the tax determined without regard to the preceding provision of this paragraph is lower than that computed under the preceding provision, the lower tax shall apply.

(3) In the event the laws of either Contracting State are changed substantially to reduce the tax benefits of the marital deduction or community property, the competent authorities of the Contracting States shall consult to determine whether this Article shall be modified or shall cease to have effect.

CHAPTER IV.—RELIEF FROM DOUBLE TAXATION

ARTICLE 12.—EXEMPTIONS AND CREDITS

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Convention, each Contracting State shall impose its tax, and shall allow exemptions, deductions, credits, and other allowances, in accordance with its laws.

(2) Double taxation shall be avoided in the following manner:

(a) In determining the French tax where property may be taxed by the United States in accordance with Article 5, 6, or 7, such property shall be exempt from the French tax. However, French tax with respect to property which is taxable by France in accordance with this Convention shall be computed at the rate appropriate to the total of property taxable under French law.

(b) In determining the United States tax:

(i) Where both Contracting States impose tax with respect to property which is taxable by France in accordance with Article 5, 6, or 7, the United States shall allow a credit equal to the amount of the tax imposed by France with respect to such property.

(ii) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (i), the total amount of all credits allowed by the United States pursuant to this Article or pursuant to its laws or other conventions with respect to all property in respect of which a credit is allowable under subparagraph (i) shall not exceed that part of the tax of the United States which is attributable to such property.

(iii) Any credits for tax imposed by France allowable under this Article are in lieu of, and not in addition to, any such credits allowed by the laws of the United States.

(3) If the decedent or donor was a citizen of the United States at the time of death or the making of a gift and would be considered under Article 4 as having been domiciled in France at such time, the United States shall allow a credit equal to the amount of the tax imposed by France.

(4) Exemption and credits under this Article shall be tentatively allowed by the United States on the basis of statements made in the tax return as to the amount of any tax paid or payable to France. However, such exemptions and credits shall not be finally allowed until any such tax for which the exemption or credit is allowable has been paid.

(5) The provisions of this Convention shall not result in an increase in the amount of the tax imposed by either Contracting State under its domestic laws. A reduction in the credit allowed against United States tax for the tax paid to France which results from the application of this Convention shall not be considered as an increase in tax.

CHAPTER V.—SPECIAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 13.—TIME LIMITATIONS ON CLAIMS FOR CREDIT OR REFUND

(1) Any claim for credit or for refund of tax founded on the provisions of this Convention shall be made before the expiration of the latest of:

(a) The time for the making of a claim for refund of tax under the laws of the Contracting State to which the claim for credit or refund is made;

(b) Five years from the date of death of the decedent, or from the making of a gift with respect to which the claim is made; or

(c) One year after final determination (administrative or judicial) and payment of tax for which any credit under Article 12 is claimed, provided that the determination and payment are made within 10 years of the date of death of the decedent or of the making of a gift.

(2) Any refund based on the provisions of this Convention shall be made without payment of interest on the amount so refunded.

ARTICLE 14.—MUTUAL AGREEMENT PROCEDURE

(1) Any person who considers that the actions of one or both of the Contracting States result or will result for him in taxation not in accordance with this Convention may, notwithstanding the remedies provided by the laws of those States, present his case to the competent authority of either Contracting State. Such presentation must be made within the period of time prescribed for the filing of a claim for credit or refund under Article 13. Should the person's claim be considered to have merit by the competent authority of the Contracting State to which the claim is made, it shall seek agreement with the competent authority of the other Contracting State with a view to the avoidance of taxation contrary to the provisions of this Convention.

(2) The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall resolve by mutual agreement any difficulties or doubts arising as to the application of this Convention.

(3) The competent authorities of the Contracting States may communicate with each other directly for the purpose of reaching an agreement in the sense of this Article. When it seems advisable for the purpose of reaching an agreement, the competent authorities may meet together for an oral exchange of opinions.

(4) When the competent authorities reach such an agreement, taxes shall be imposed, and refund or credit of taxes shall be allowed by the Contracting States in accordance with such agreement, notwithstanding any procedural rule (including the statute of limitations) applicable under the laws of either Contracting State.

(5) The competent authority of each Contracting State may prescribe such regulations and forms as may be necessary or appropriate to give effect to and implement the provisions of this Convention.

ARTICLE 15.—FILING OF RETURNS AND EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

(1)(a) The provisions of Articles 5, 6, 7, or 8, which change the taxability or situs of property or the amount of tax which would have been due in the absence of this Convention, shall not change:

(i) The requirements of the respective tax laws of the Contracting States relating to information or tax returns or notices, transfer certificates or maintenance of records, and

(ii) The applicability and amount of any sanctions of such laws with respect to the requirements referred to to in subparagraph (i).

(b) As concerns the United States, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (a), the requirements or sanctions found to be unnecessary for the prevention of fraud or fiscal evasion with respect to taxes to which this Convention applies may be eliminated or modified (but not made more burdensome) by regulations prescribed pursuant to paragraph (5) of Article 14.

(2) The competent authority of each Contracting State shall furnish the competent authority of the other Contracting State such information as is pertinent to:

(a) Carrying out the provisions of this Convention or the laws of such other Contracting State concerning its tax insofar as the taxation thereunder is in accordance with this Convention, or

(b) Preventing fraud or fiscal evasion in relation to the taxes which are the subject of this Convention (including information with respect to property exempted from the tax of the first-mentioned Contracting State by reason of Article 8).

However, this paragraph shall not require the competent authority of a Contracting State to furnish information not in the possession of that Contracting State with respect to property exempted from its tax by reason of Article 8. Any information furnished shall be treated as secret and shall not be disclosed to any persons other than those (including a court or administrative body) concerned with assessment, collection, enforcement, or prosecution in respect of the taxes which are the subject of this Convention.

(3) In no case shall the provisions of paragraph (2) be construed so as to impose on one of the Contracting States the obligation:

(a) To carry out administrative measures at variance with the laws or the administrative practice of that or of the other Contracting State;

(b) To supply particulars which are not obtainable under the laws or in the normal course of the administration of that or of the other Contracting State;

(c) To supply information which would disclose any trade, business, industrial, commercial, or professional secret or trade process, or information the disclosure of which would be contrary to public policy.

(4) The furnishing of information shall be either on a routine basis or on request with reference to particular cases. The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall agree on the list of information which shall be furnished on a routine basis.

ARTICLE 16.—ASSISTANCE IN COLLECTION

(1) The two Contracting States undertake to lend assistance and support to each other in the collection of the taxes to which this Convention relates, together with interest, costs, and additions to the taxes and fines not being of a penal character according to the laws of the State requested, in cases where the taxes are definitively due according to the laws of the State making the application.

(2) In the case of an application for enforcement of taxes, revenue claims of each of the Contracting States which have been finally determined will be accepted for enforcement by the State to which application is made and collected in that State in accordance with the laws applicable to the enforcement and collection of its own taxes.

(3) The application will be accompanied by such documents as are required by the laws of the State making the application to establish that the taxes have been finally determined.

(4) If the revenue claim has not been finally determined, the State to which application is made will take such measures of conservancy (including measures with respect to transfer of property belonging to nonresident aliens) as are authorized by its laws for the enforcement of its own taxes.

(5) The assistance provided for in this Article shall not be accorded with respect to estates of citizens of the Contracting States to which application is made.

ARTICLE 17.—DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICIALS

(1) Nothing in this Convention shall affect the fiscal privileges of diplomatic or consular officials under the general rules of international law or under the provisions of special agreements.

(2) Insofar as such privileges prevent the imposition of tax in the receiving Contracting State, the right to tax shall be reserved to the Contracting State in whose service the persons concerned exercised their functions and, notwithstanding any other provisions of this Convention, such persons shall not be deemed to have been domiciled in the receiving Contracting State.

ARTICLE 18.—TERRITORIAL EXTENSION

(1) This Convention may be extended, either in its entirety or with necessary modifications, to all or any of the Overseas Territories of the French Republic or the territories for whose international relations the United States is responsible, if such territories impose taxes substantially similar in character to those referred to in Article 2. Any such extension shall take effect from such date and subject to such modifications and conditions as may be specified and agreed between the Contracting States in notes to be exchanged through diplomatic channels or in any other manner in accordance with their constitutional procedure. In the case of the United States, such procedure shall be that set forth in Article II, Section 2, of the Constitution of the United States (advice and consent of the Senate).

(2) At any time after the expiration of a period of one year from the effective date of an extension made by virtue of paragraph (1) either of the Contracting States may, by a written notice of termination given to the other Contracting State through diplomatic channels, terminate the application of the provisions in respect of any territory to which this Convention has been extended, in which case the provisions of the Convention shall cease to be applicable to such territory on and after the first day of January following the date of such notice.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed by both Contracting States, the termination of the Convention by one of the Contracting States under Article 20 shall also terminate the application of the Convention to any territory to which it has been extended under this Article.

CHAPTER VI.—FINAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 19.—ENTRY INTO FORCE

(1) This Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be exchanged at Paris as soon as possible.

(2) This Convention shall enter into force the first day of the second month following the month in which the exchange of the instruments of ratification takes place. Its provisions shall apply to estates of persons dying and to gifts made on or after that date.

(3) The Convention of October 18, 1946, as modified by the Protocol of May 17, 1948, and the Convention of June 22, 1956, shall be terminated on, and shall cease to have effect from, the date on which the present Convention enters into force according to paragraph (2).

ARTICLE 20.—TERMINATION

(1) This Convention shall remain in force until terminated by one of the Contracting States. However, not earlier than the fifth year following the year in which this Convention entered into force, either Contracting State may, between the first of January and the thirtieth of June, give written notice of termination through diplomatic channels, with effect from the end of the calendar year in which such notice is given. In such an event, its provisions shall not apply to estates of persons dying or to gifts made after the end of the calendar year with respect to the end of which this Convention has been terminated.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), if the effects of this Convention are substantially altered as a result of changes made in the tax law of either Contracting State, either Contracting State may, through diplomatic channels, give a written notice of termination with effect not earlier than 6 months after such notice is given. In such an event, its provisions shall not apply to estates of persons dying or to gifts made on or after the effective date of the termination.

In witness whereof, the plenipotentiaries of the two Contracting States have signed this Convention and affixed thereto their seals.

Done at Washington, in duplicate, in the English and French languages, each text being equally authentic, this 24th day of November 1978.

ESTATE AND GIFT TAX TREATY WITH THE FRENCH REPUBLIC

June 15, 1979

Mr. Church, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report to accompany Ex. J, 96th Cong., 1st sess.

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the Estate and Gift Tax Treaty with the French Republic ("France")[1] for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on estates, inheritances and gifts, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon without reservation and recommends that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification thereof.

I. PURPOSE

The purpose of the proposed estate and gift tax treaty between the United States and France is to alleviate double taxation on estates and gifts of French and U.S. domiciliaries and U.S. citizens by modifying the jurisdictional rules of estate and gift taxation with respect to these individuals.

[2] II. BACKGROUND

The proposed treaty was signed by the United States and the French Republic on November 24, 1978, and has been submitted to the Senate for advice and consent to its ratification. The Tax Treaty was transmitted to the Senate on February 9, 1979.

The portion of the proposed treaty dealing with state taxation will replace the existing estate tax treaty and protocol between the United States and France, which have been in force since October 17, 1949 [1956-1 C.B. 837]. There is no existing gift tax treaty between the two countries.

III. SUMMARY OF TREATY

The proposed treaty will alleviate double taxation on gifts and estates of United States citizens and domiciliaries and French domiciliaries in some situations by allowing only one country to impose its tax and in others by allowing both countries to impose a tax but requiring one of the countries to allow a credit against its tax for the taxes paid to the other country.

In most situations, the treaty allows the country of domicile to assert primary tax jurisdiction. However, the situs country is given priority taxation in the case of real property, tangible personal property, and business assets which are located in that country.

The treaty provides that the domicile of an individual will be determined separately under the laws of each country. If only one of the two countries treats the individual as a domiciliary under its domestic laws, then that is the country of domicile for purposes of the treaty. However, if both countries treat the individual as a domiciliary under their domestic laws, then the treaty sets forth an extensive set of rules to determine the individual's domicile for purposes of establishing primary tax jurisdiction under the treaty. The approach used in this set of rules is to recognize that where an individual domiciled in both countries is a national of one of the two countries and has been resident for only a limited period of time in the other country, his ties with the country of residence are not sufficient to justify the assertion of primary tax jurisdiction by that country. However, where an individual has been domiciled in both countries for a substantial period of time, the country with which he has his closest ties (such as the place of his permanent home) has the greater claim to domicile and, thus, primary tax jurisdiction will generally be allowed to that country.

[3] IV. DATE OF ENTRY INTO FORCE AND TERMINATION

Entry into force

The proposed treaty will enter into force on the first day of the second month following the month in which the instruments of ratification are exchanged and will apply to estates of persons dying and to gifts made on or after that date. The existing treaty terminates at that time.

Termination

The proposed treaty will continue in force indefinitely but either country may terminate it as of the close of any calendar year which ends at least 5 years after the treaty enters into force. Termination is accomplished by delivering written notice between January 1st and June 30th of that same year.

The proposed treaty can also be terminated if changes in the tax laws of either country result in a substantial alteration of the effects of the treaty. Such termination will occur 6 months after the delivery of notice. A termination under this provision is not subject to the 5-year minimum period previously mentioned.

V. COMMITTEE ACTION

The Committee on Foreign Relations held public hearings on the proposed French estate and gift tax treaty and on other proposed tax treaties, on June 6, 1979. The Committee considered the proposed treaty on June 12, 1979 and ordered it favorably reported by a vote of 13 yeas, no nays, with the recommendation that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification of the treaty.

VI. BUDGET IMPACT

The Committee estimates that the effect of the proposed treaty on budget receipts will be negligible.

In accordance with the objectives of section 403 of the Budget Act, the Committee advises that the Director of the Congressional Budget Office has examined the Committee's budget estimate and agrees that the effect on budget receipts will be negligible. In keeping with section 308(a) of the Budget Act, and after consultation with the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, the Committee states that the treaty does not provide any new budget authority or any new or increased tax expenditures.

[4] VII. EXPLANATION OF TREATY PROVISIONS

A comprehensive article-by-article explanation of the proposed estate, inheritance and gift tax treaty between the United States and France is set forth below.

Article 1. Estates and gifts covered

The proposed treaty applies to estates of decedents who were domiciled in France at the time of their death and to estates that are subject to tax in the United States because the decedent was a citizen or domiciliary of the United States at the time of his death. With respect to gifts, the treaty applies to gifts made while the donor was a domiciliary of France and to gifts which are subject to tax in the United States because the donor was a citizen or domiciliary of the United States when the gift was made. Generation-skipping transfers which are subject to tax in the United States because the transferor was a U.S. citizen or domiciliary are also covered.

The proposed treaty does not treat certain residents of U.S. possessions as U.S. citizens or domiciliaries. These are individuals who acquired U.S. citizenship solely because they were citizens of a possession or because they were born in a possession or were residents of a possession. Under U.S. law (Code sec. 2209 and sec. 2501(c)), these individuals are not taxed by the United States on their worldwide estates and gifts, so protection against double taxation is generally unnecessary. Accordingly, the proposed treaty will not apply to estates or gifts of these individuals, unless it is applicable by reason of their being domiciled in France.

Article 2. Taxes covered

The proposed treaty applies to the U.S. estate tax, gift tax, and the tax on generation-skipping transfers.

The United States imposes its estate tax on the worldwide assets of estates of persons who were citizens or domiciliaries of the United States at the time of their death, and on property belonging to non-domiciliaries of the United States which is situated in the United States at the time of their death. The U.S. gift tax is imposed on all gifts made by U.S. citizens and domiciliaries, and on gifts of property made by nondomiciliaries where the property is tangible property located in the United States at the time of the gift.

The U.S. tax on generation-skipping transfers was enacted in 1976 to prevent the transfer of the use of property among generations of the transferor's descendants without the payment of gift or estate taxes. In general, the tax on such transfers is imposed when property passes through a trust from persons of one generation to persons of another generation, and the transfer is not otherwise subject to estate or gift tax.

The proposed treaty applies to the French succession duty and the French gift duty. The succession duty is imposed on the world-wide [5] assets of persons domiciled in France at the time of their death, and on property of nondomiciliaries of France where the property is located in France at the time of their death. France imposes a gift duty on all gifts made by persons domiciled in France, and on property of nondomiciliaries that is located in France at the time of the gift.

As is generally true in the case of other U.S. estate tax treaties, the proposed treaty does not apply to death or gift taxes imposed by state or local governments. In addition, the proposed treaty provides that it will apply to any substantially similar taxes on estates, inheritances and gifts that either country may subsequently impose. The competent authorities of both countries are required to notify each other in the case of any substantial changes in their estate, inheritance or gift tax laws.

Article 3. General definitions

The standard definitions generally found in most existing U.S. estate tax treaties are contained in the proposed treaty.

The United States is defined to mean the fifty states and the District of Columbia. Thus, U.S. possessions and territories are not covered by the treaty. France is defined to mean that part of France situated in Europe and the Overseas Departments of the French Republic which include Guadaloupe, Martinique, Guyane and Reunion. The geographical definition of both countries also includes any area where either country may, under international law, exercise rights with respect to the natural resources of the seabed and subsoil.

The proposed treaty also contains the standard provision that undefined terms are to have the meaning which they have under the applicable tax laws of the country whose tax is being determined. In addition, it is further provided that where a term defined in a different manner by the two countries, the countries may establish a common meaning of the term in order to prevent double taxation or to further any other purposes of the proposed convention.

Article 4. Fiscal domicile

The concept of domicile is important under the proposed treaty because the country of domicile has, under the treaty, primary tax jurisdiction on all property other than the property subject to situs taxation. The country of domicile is initially determined by each country under its domestic laws. However, in those situations where both countries would treat an individual as a domiciliary, the treaty sets forth rules for establishing the country of domicile for purposes of the taxes covered by the treaty.

Ordinarily, the tests employed by countries to determine the domicile of an individual often are not exactly the same. Under the Internal Revenue Code an individual is considered a domiciliary of the United States for purposes of the Federal estate and gift tax if the person was residing in the United States and had the intent to remain in the United States indefinitely (or had been residing in the United States with such an intent and had subsequently left this country without an intent to remain indefinitely at his new place of residence). A person is considered domiciled in France if his main establishment is in France. In general, a person's main establishment is where he physically [6] resides and intends to live permanently. In the situation where an individual resides (or has resided) in both countries, it is possible that each country, in ascertaining where the individual intended to make his permanent home, could arrive at different conclusions from the individual's actions. Thus, each country could hold that these actions clearly demonstrate the individual's intention to make that country his permanent home and, accordingly, his domicile.

To provide relief from double taxation where each country considers the individual to be a domiciliary under its domestic laws, the proposed treaty provides a series of rules designed to establish a single country of domicile for the individual for purposes of the taxes covered by the treaty. The country so selected will then have the primary tax jurisdiction with respect to the worldwide estate of the decedent or his worldwide gifts, other than with respect to real property, business assets or tangible property situated in the other country. As described below, these rules are based on the concept that primary tax jurisdiction should be exercised either by the country of nationality, if the dual domicile individual has not been resident in the other country for a substantial period of time prior to his death or the making of the gift, or by the country in which he has his most significant contacts if the nationality test is not determinative.

In determining the domicile of an individual under the proposed treaty, each country will first determine whether the individual is considered a domiciliary under its law. If the individual is a domiciliary of only one country then that will be the individual's country of domicile for purposes of the proposed treaty. However, if both countries determine the individual to be a domiciliary, the proposed treaty provides a series of rules by which an exclusive domicile for the individual will be determined.

The first rule that is applied consists of two separate tests which apply to persons who are citizens of only one of the two countries. Under the first test, such a person will be considered domiciled in the country of which he is a citizen if he was domiciled in the other country for less than 5 years during the 7-year period which ends with the year of his death or the year the gift was made, and he was in that country because of an assignment of employment or because he was the spouse or dependent of a person who was in that country for such a purpose. Under the second test, the person will be considered a domiciliary of the country of which he is a citizen if he was domiciled in the other country for less than 7 years during the 10-year period which ends with the year of his death or the year the gift was made, and he was in that country because of a renewal of an assignment of employment or because he was the spouse or dependent of a person who was in that country for such a purpose.

A second rule, which is similar to the first in that it applies to persons who are domiciliaries of both countries and citizens of only one of the countries, applies if domicile cannot be resolved under the first rule. Under the second rule such a person will be considered a domiciliary of the country of which he is a citizen if he had a clear intention to retain his domicile in that country and he was domiciled in the other country for less than 5 years during the 7-year period which ends with the year of death or the year the gift was made.

[7] It is contemplated that these rules will resolve the great majority of dual domicile situations. However, if a dual domicile problem still remains after application of these rules, the proposed treaty provides four additional rules to determine domicile. The rules (applied in the order presented) provide that the individual will be considered domiciled in the country (1) in which he maintained his permanent home, (2) in which his personal relations were the closest (center of vital interests), (3) in which he had a habitual abode, or (4) in his country of citizenship. In cases where an individual's domicile cannot be determined under these rules, the competent authorities of the countries are to settle the question by mutual agreement.

Article 5. Immovable (real) property

Under the proposed treaty, immovable (real) property is one of the three types of property over which the situs country, rather than the country of domicile has primary tax jurisdiction. The other two are assets of a permanent establishment or fixed base (Article 6) and tangible movable property (Article 7).

The determination of whether an item of property is immovable (real) property is to be made under tax laws of the country in which the property is located. Although U.S. law does not define "immovable (real) property," that term for U.S. purposes is considered to mean real property. It is further provided that immovable (real) property does not include claims secured by real property (such as mortgages). Real property which is part of the business assets of a permanent establishment or used for the performance of professional or similar independent services is taxable under this article, rather than Article 6.

Article 6. Business property of a permanent establishment and assets pertaining to a fixed base used for the performance of professional services

Under the proposed treaty, the second type of property over which the situs country has primary tax jurisdiction is the business assets (other than ships and aircraft operated in international traffic and related personal property and other than real property) of an individual's permanent establishment which located in the situs country and the assets (other than real property) of a fixed base of an individual which is situated in the country and is used for the performance of professional services or other similar independent activities. The real property of a permanent establishment or fixed base is to be taxed by the country in which it is situated, as provided in Article 5.

The proposed treaty contains a definition of the term "permanent establishment" which is similar to the definition found in recent U.S. income tax treaties. Generally, any fixed place of business through which a person engages in a trade or business is considered a permanent establishment. For this purpose, a person is considered engaged in a trade or business regardless of whether the business is carried on as a sole proprietorship or through a partnership or as an unincorporated association which is not taxed as a corporation. In the case of a partnership or association, however, only the person's interest in the business entity will be taken into account for purposes of this provision.

A fixed place of business generally includes a branch, office, factory, workshop, warehouse, place of extraction of natural resources, and [8] any building site or construction or assembly project which exists for more than 12 months. This general rule is modified by providing that a fixed place of business which is used for certain activities specified in the treaty will not be considered a permanent establishment. These activities include, for example, the warehousing of goods for purposes of storage, display, or delivery, and the use of a fixed place of business solely for the purpose of purchasing merchandise or collecting information. An additional activity included within this exempt category is the maintenance of a fixed place of business solely for investment purposes of an individual, whether conducted by the individual, his employees, a broker or other agent.

The proposed treaty also provides that a person will be deemed to have a permanent establishment in a country if he had an agent in that country who had and habitually exercised a general contracting authority (other than for the purchase of goods or merchandise) in that country. This agency rule does not apply, however, if the agent is a broker, general commission agent, or any other agent of an independent status, provided the agent is acting in the ordinary course of his business.

A company will not be held to have a permanent establishment in one of the countries solely because it controls a company which is a resident of that country.

Article 7. Tangible movable property

With three exceptions, tangible movable (i.e., personal) property, other than currency, is subject to tax in the country in which the property is situated. The first exception is for property which is held for use by a permanent establishment or a fixed base used for the performance of professional services which is located in the other country. This property is subject to tax by the country in which the permanent establishment or fixed base is located.

A second exception is for property owned by an individual who is considered domiciled in the country of which he is a citizen (under the special 5-of-7 or 7-of-10 year rules used in Article 4(3) to determine domicile) if the property is for the normal personal use of that person or his family. Essentially, this property can only be taxed by the country of citizenship.

Finally, ships and aircraft operated in international traffic, and personal property pertaining to the operation of such ships and aircraft, may be taxed by the country in which they are registered. Other ships and aircraft may be taxed by the country whose harbors and airports are most frequently used by the ships and aircraft.

Article 8. Taxation other than pursuant to Articles 5, 6, and 7

This article sets forth the general treaty rule that the country of domicile, as determined under the treaty, has the primary tax jurisdiction over the estates or gifts of its domiciliaries other than the property specifically reserved for situs taxation.

The proposed treaty provides that property, other than real property, assets of a permanent establishment or fixed base, and tangible personal property, may be subject to tax in either of the two countries only if the individual is a citizen or domiciliary of that country and the property is otherwise subject to tax in that country. This provision is explicitly intended to cover corporate stock, debt obligations, other intangible property and currency.

[9] Since the United States does tax based upon citizenship (France does not), there is still the possibility of double taxation if an individual is a U.S. citizen and a French domiciliary. The possibility of double taxation in that situation is, however, alleviated under the tax credit structure established in Article 12.

Article 9. Deduction of debts

The proposed treaty provides that if debts are deductible from the value of property in computing the estate or gift tax of either country, these debts are to be deducted from the gross value of the property subject to tax in that country in the same proportion that such gross value bears to the total gross value of all the property. However, in computing the French tax, debts pertaining to a permanent establishment or a fixed base are to be deducted in total from the assets (other than real property) that relate to the permanent establishment or fixed base. Similarly, debts relating to ships and aircraft, and their movable property, are to be deducted in total from the value of those assets. These debts are to be allowed as a deduction in computing the French tax under the treaty even if they would not be allowed as a deduction under French internal law.

Article 10. Charitable exemptions and deductions

Essentially, this provision allows contributions made to charitable organizations in one country to be exempt from tax in the other country or to be deductible in computing the tax in that other country. This treatment is allowed only if the transfer would be eligible for an exemption or deduction if the charitable organization had been created in the taxing country. Additionally, the charitable organization must have a tax-exempt status in its home country so that payments to it are exempt or fully deductible, it must be organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes, and it must receive a substantial part of its support from public or governmental funds. Thus, in computing the French tax, no deduction or exemption is allowed for contributions to a private foundation, even if the contribution would be deductible under U.S. law.

Contributions to governmental organizations will not qualify for exempt or deductible status unless the contribution is specifically limited to one of the tax-exempt purposes enumerated above.

Article 11. Community property and marital deduction

The proposed treaty allows U.S. citizens and domiciliaries to elect to treat property which is subject to the French tax as being community property. Essentially, this means that France will only tax one-half of the gifts made by a person to his spouse and it will only tax one-half of the property that passes from a decedent to his spouse. In both cases, the other one-half is deemed to already belong to the spouse under the elected community property laws.

Reciprocally, French domiciliaries may, in computing their U.S. tax, take the marital deduction that would be allowed to a U.S. domiciliary on November 24, 1978, the date the proposed treaty was signed. Currently, a nondomiciliary does not get a marital deduction, but is entitled to lower tax rates than those applicable to domiciliaries and citizens. If a French domiciliary claims the marital deduction allowed by this article, he is required to compute his tax at the rates [10] applicable to U.S. citizens and domiciliaries. A French domiciliary will be taxed at the rates applicable to nondomiciliaries without a marital deduction, if the tax computed on that basis is lower than the tax computed by allowing a marital deduction and applying the higher rates.

If the laws of either country are modified substantially to reduce the benefits of the community property rules in the case of France or the marital deduction in the case of the United States, the tax authorities of the two countries will consult on whether this provision should be modified or terminated. Actual modification or termination will require termination of the entire treaty (Article 20) or other action in accord with the constitutional procedures of each country.

Article 12. Exemptions and credits

Except as otherwise provided in the treaty, each country shall compute its estate or gift tax in accordance with its own laws including the allowance of exemptions, deductions, credits, and other allowances allowed under the country's internal law. In general, double taxation is avoided because France exempts property from taxation that is subject to situs taxation in the United States and because the United States allows a credit for taxes paid to France on property subject to situs taxation in France.

Specifically, real property, assets of a permanent establishment or fixed base, and tangible movable property, which are subject to situs taxation in the United States, as provided for in the proposed treaty, will be completely exempt from tax in France. However, this property will be taken into account in determining the appropriate tax rate applicable to the property which is subject to French taxation (i.e., an exemption with progression).

Correspondingly, the United States will allow a credit against its estate or gift tax for taxes paid to France on property where, under the proposed treaty, the property is subject to situs taxation in France. However, the credit will only be allowed for taxes actually paid to France and the credit is not to exceed the U.S. estate or gift tax attributable to the property. In addition, the credit is in lieu of any other such credits allowed under the laws of the United States.

The United States gives France primary tax jurisdiction over U.S. citizens determined to be French domiciliaries under the treaty. The treaty provides that the United States will give a full tax credit for taxes paid to France by a U.S. citizen who is deemed to be a French domiciliary under the treaty (i.e. the amount of the credit can exceed the amount of the U.S. tax attributable to the property, but it cannot, of course, exceed the U.S. tax on the entire estate). However, if the U.S. tax exceeds the French tax, the excess will be collected by the United States.

The proposed treaty stipulates that the treaty will not increase the amount of tax due to either country under its domestic laws. However, a reduction in the amount of the foreign tax credit allowed by the United States against its estate and gift tax will not be considered to be an increase in tax. This prevents the argument that an individual would have received a higher foreign tax credit without the treaty, because he would have paid more French taxes, and thus should be [11] allowed the higher foreign tax credit even though the treaty reduced his French tax.

Article 13. Time limitations on claims for credit or refund

Under the Internal Revenue Code, a claim for credit or refund of U.S. estate and gift taxes generally must be made within 3 years from the date the return was filed. The proposed treaty provides a period of limitation during which claims for credit or refund of taxes based on the provisions of the treaty may be made which, in some cases, may be longer than that allowed by the Internal Revenue Code. It is provided that a claim for a credit or refund of taxes based on the provisions of the treaty must be made before the expiration of the latest of (1) the period of limitations prescribed under the domestic law of the country to which the claim is made, (2) 5 years from the date of the decedent's death or the date of the gift, or (3) 1 year after final determination and payment of a tax for which a credit is claimed under the treaty (provided the determination and payment occur within 10 years from the date of the decedent's death or the date of the gift).

The proposed treaty follows the approach of other U.S. estate tax treaties and provides that any refund based on the provisions of the treaty is to be made without interest.

Articles 14 and 15. Administrative provisions

The proposed treaty contains various administrative provisions which are generally found in other U.S. tax treaties. In general, the proposed treaty provides—

(1) For consultation and negotiation between the competent authorities of the two countries to resolve differences arising in the interpretation or application of the proposed treaty and also to resolve claims by taxpayers that they are being subjected to taxation contrary to the proposed treaty;

(2) For the exchange between the countries of information pertinent to carrying out the provisions of the proposed treaty or the tax laws of one of the countries, insofar as its taxation is in accordance with the proposed treaty, or to prevent fraud or fiscal evasion with respect to the taxes covered by the proposed treaty; and

(3) For continuing the tax return and recordkeeping requirements that exist under each country's domestic law, except with respect to U.S. provisions which the Treasury finds are not necessary for the prevention of fraud or fiscal evasion.

Article 16. Assistance in collection

The two countries agree to assist each other in collecting each other's estate and gift taxes. This assistance extends to enforcing assessments that have been finally determined under the law of the requesting country and taking measures of conservancy where the assessment has not been finally determined. The assistance each country is obligated to give is limited to the enforcement measures it can take in enforcing its own assessments.

The assistance provided by a country will not extend to enforcement of assessments against estates of its own citizens.

[12] Article 17. Diplomatic and consular officials

The proposed treaty provides that its provisions are not to affect the fiscal privileges which diplomatic and consular officials and officials of international organizations enjoy under the general rules of international law or the provisions of special agreements. It is further provided that the right to tax those persons will be reserved to the country for whom they perform their functions and that these officials are not to be considered domiciled in the country where they are employed. This provision is designed to prevent diplomatic and consular officials of a third country from claiming domicile in either the United States or France so as to bring themselves within the provisions of the convention.

Article 18. Territorial extension

The proposed treaty contains a method similar to that found in some of our other U.S. tax treaties by which the treaty may be extended to any of the Overseas Territories of the French Republic or to any territories for whose international relations the United States is responsible, if the territory imposes taxes substantially similar to those covered by the treaty. The treaty may be extended pursuant to this provision either in its entirety or with necessary modifications. The extension is to be effected in accordance with the constitutional procedures of the two countries. This requirement follows the U.S. Senate's reservation to the territorial extension provision of the income tax treaty between the United States and France.

Any extension of the treaty to an eligible territory of either country may be terminated after one year. Additionally, if the treaty between the two countries is terminated, the termination shall extend to any extensions made under the treaty.

Article 19. Entry into force

The proposed treaty will enter into force on the first day of the second month following the month in which the instruments of ratification are exchanged and will apply to estates of persons dying and to gifts made on or after that date. The existing treaty terminates at that time.

Article 20. Termination

The proposed treaty will continue in force indefinitely but either country may terminate it as of the close of any calendar year which ends at least 5 years after the treaty enters into force. Termination is accomplished by delivering written notice between January 1st and June 30th of that same year.

The proposed treaty can also be terminated if changes in the tax laws of either country result in a substantial alteration of the effects of the treaty. Such termination will occur 6 months after the delivery of notice. A termination under this provision is not subject to the 5-year minimum period previously mentioned.

[58] APPENDIX C

WRITTEN RESPONSES BY TREASURY TO QUESTIONS BY THE COMMITTEE STAFF

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D.C., June 8, 1979.

Hon. FRANK CHURCH,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: To follow-up my testimony at the June 6 hearings concerning the six tax conventions or protocols involving the United Kingdom, France, Hungary and Korea, I want to assure you that Article I of the Third Protocol of the proposed US-UK Income Tax Treaty gives full effect to the Senate's reservation on Article 9(4) of that treaty. Let me also assure you that there is no similar state tax issue in any of the other five treaties which were considered by the Committee yesterday.

Again let me emphasize our view that each of these treaties is important to the United States and that their prompt approval is desirable.

I am also enclosing answers to the written questions submitted to me by your staff at the hearings as well as copies of my answers to questions from Senator Helms and Senator Javits.

Sincerely,

Donald C. Lubick,
Assistant Secretary (Tax Policy).

Enclosures.

[60] QUESTIONS ON UNITED STATES-FRANCE ESTATE AND GIFT TAX TREATY

Question 1. The proposed Convention is an extension of the Foreign Investors Tax Act of 1966 [Pub. L. 89-809, 1966-2 C.B. 656], could you please describe the benefits, as you see them, that the U.S. has derived from the 1966 Act as well as the first convention under the Act with the Netherlands [1967-2 C.B. 472]?

Answer. The proposed Convention is not really an "extension" of the Foreign Investors Tax Act of 1966. It is a Convention which modifies the provisions of the convention currently in force between two parties in order to harmonize the treaty arrangement with the provisions of the 1966 Act.

The primary objective of the 1966 Act was to remove or reduce barriers created by the tax system to the free flow of foreign capital into the United States. The estate tax provisions of the Act lowered the tax rate imposed upon the estates of foreigners who owned U.S. property at their death. The primary achievement of the statute was [61] to lessen tax barriers to the inflow of foreign capital into the United States.

The primary achievement of the Netherlands Convention from the perspective of the United States was the agreement by the Netherlands to the special rules which deem a U.S. citizen a domiciliary of the U.S. if he is deemed domiciled in both countries at the time of his death, but if he has not lived in the Netherlands more than 7 of the 10 years ending with his death. This ensures that American citizens living in the Netherlands will not be subject to Netherlands estate tax unless they have formed an intent to stay in the Netherlands, or have lived there a long time. This is of substantial importance to U.S. companies doing business in the Netherlands, since it permits them to assign their executives to the Netherlands without the employees becoming subject, simply by virtue of living in the Netherlands for a short time, to Netherlands estate taxes.

Question 2. A major feature of the proposed convention is the use of a five year time period that will be the basis for determining the domicile of a taxpayer. Could you explain the reason the five year time period was selected?

Answer. The five-year period is relevant only in cases where each State under its own law considers an individual to be its own domiciliary at the same time. The five-year period is irrelevant to the determination of domicile under domestic law, and comes into play only after such a determination has been made in each State. It also applies only if the person is a citizen of only one of the Contracting States.

The five-year period (or the 5-of-7 rule of Article 4(3) of the Convention) was the product of bargaining between the parties. The official U.S. position, reflected in the model treaty and the U.S.-Netherlands treaty, is that a person should have to live in a country other than that of his citizenship 7 of 10 years before his death to be subject to the new country's death taxes. The French position was that only the "tie-breaker" rules of Article 4(2) should be used for any case of "double domicile," regardless of the fact that the person was a citizen of only one Contracting State. The 5-of-7 rule represents a compromise between the two positions.

The 7-of-10 year rule of the model is based upon a balancing of concerns for determining which State should have the right to tax the lifetime accumulation of an individual. In general, the U.S. believes that the momentary circumstance of residence at death should not be controlling, particularly where a citizen of one country is residing abroad, and doing so only for a short time. The U.S. believes, however, that if a person lives in a country for a substantial period of time, at some point that country acquires a legitimate claim to tax the person's lifetime accumulation, even if the person is not a citizen of the country and does not intend to remain there forever.

Question 3. Would you detail the number of individuals affected by the proposed Convention and the revenue that will be received by the Treasury as a result of the proposed Convention? In addition, would you, for the record, submit estimated cost to the Department of Treasury, IRS, or other U.S. Government entities responsible for enforcing the terms of the Convention?

[62] Answer. It is impossible to determine which individuals will be affected by the proposed Convention, since that depends upon the domicile of individuals at the time of their death or their gifts, and upon what property such individuals own at such times. The Treasury does not have statistics on the number of U.S. citizens living in France or French citizens living in the United States, who might be affected by the domicile determination rules of the Convention; nor does it have reliable data concerning the amount of U.S. situs property held by French domiciliaries, or French situs property held by U.S. domiciliaries, the taxation of which might be affected by the allocation of tax jurisdiction effected by the Convention.

The Treasury believes, however, that the Convention will not have a substantial revenue effect. This is because the Convention embodies a balance of concessions by the two sides, respective revenue effects of which are likely to cancel each other out. For instance, the Convention's domicile rules enable the U.S. to tax its citizens living in France if they have not lived there more than 5 of 7 years: to this extent, it is likely to result in a slight revenue gain to the U.S. On the other hand, the Convention also restricts the rights of the U.S. to tax certain intangible U.S. property owned by French persons at the time of death; to this extent, it probably involves some revenue cost to the U.S. To the extent the Convention as a whole eliminates barriers created by potential double taxation to the free flow of goods, persons, and capital between the two countries, it probably results in a slight revenue gain to each country.
